The Powell roll of arms

1. Introduction

According to Anthony Wagner, the late Garter King-of-arms and doyen of researchers of English armorials, this armorial was collated and compiled at the beginning of the glorious middle part of the reign of Edward III, between 1345 and 1351.¹ This conclusion did not require much scholarly research, only a little perusing of the manuscript by a person with a fair knowledge of the peerage. The layout of the armorial makes it easy to approach with 45 banners at the beginning and narrow shields for the rest.² One needs only to look at the banners and note a few odd earls, who never passed this dignity on.

There were probably other copies or versions in circulation in former times, but only the one copied in 1584 by Robert Glover, then Somerset Herald, has survived. A more recent copy was painted in 1812 by the Rev. David Thomas Powell. It was considered the most important roll from the reign by James H. Greenstreet (d.1891), who a few years before his untimely early death transcribed it from Powell's redrawing adjusted with the 'original' and named it the Powell Roll.³ Despite this assessment, no real interest in it has been taken before the present edition.⁴

Wagner noted a commonality with the Antiquaries' Roll (AN) for which there is an unpublished transcription by Oswald Barron in the Society of Antiquaries in London. This armorial is dated a decade later. There is a considerable overlap, but no concordance. Besides recording a large number of coats of arms the Powell has two interesting elements: (1) there are multiple entries for very many families, and (2) much of the gentry in it appear to have held properties in East Anglia. As will be discussed below, the collation of arms and the compilation of the armorial must have been completed shortly before 1348. The armorial is not a record of participants in the early campaigns, but a survey of people of interest to the anonymous compiler.

It is impractical, rather than impossible, to research and write extensive biographies on so many persons in relation to an armorial, so the search for documentation has been limited to just enough to identify the individual and place him socially and in time and space. Further information on the families, patrilineal lineages, is available in the standard references quoted, e.g. Complete Peerage, Brault's The Rolls of Arms of Edward I, and Moor's Knights of Edward I (mainly for fathers and earlier ancestors of the entries). The work of G.J. Brault is largely dependent on that of C. Moor, but of value for ease of consultation as well as content. All three draw on, and refer to, calendared governmental records, seals and other armorials. In addition selected volumes of the printed calendars of inquisitions post-mortem, patent rolls and close rolls have been consulted.

A county affiliation is placed in the margin of entries in this edition for the county in which the principal properties of the family, if not the person, ought to be. If not, it should be the county in which the family first settled when noted in the official records. In many cases, this is obviously not the case. Acquisitions by marriage or grants often changed the distribution of lands, especially for ambitious (and lucky) younger sons. Similarly, extinction of a branch in the male line transferred many family properties to the husbands of heiresses. The reader will note the passing of lands by grants to apparently unrelated people, who then re-grant them back to the original owner on changed conditions in order to circumvent the normal rules of inheritance - usually for a fine (payment) to the royal administration. Some territorial affiliations were derived from the survey of knights in the Great or Parliamentary Roll (N/PAR) from 1307/12, which in several cases are not the same as the counties a person is known to have represented in Parliament or in a great council.

2. The manuscripts

There are three known manuscripts of the Powell armorial, two painted and one tricked. The principal manuscript (PO/a) is on vellum and could be contemporary with the collation of arms. The animal hide has never been tested for age, and the stylistic indicators are in principle unreliable. The copyist would probably faithfully render all details as in his source. This was the case for the Hatton-Dugdale copies of the mid 17th century now in the Society of Antiquaries.

Wagner concluded that the tricked 16th century copy (PO/b) was probably from another version than the present principal manuscript, and in any case, this copy is rudimentary and unfinished.⁵ The copy (PO/c) made in 1812 is nice to have, but essentially worthless from a scholarly point of view. Its main force is that the copyist saw the principal manuscript two centuries earlier, and may have noted details that have been lost in the meantime. It also has an unintentional value as an example of the types and frequency of mistakes a copyist may make. The Reverend Powell was by all criteria a scrupulous workman.

There is one printed transcription of the armorial by James Greenstreet published in Jewitt's Reliquary in instalments during 1889-90.⁶ He used the 1812 facsimile (PO/c) as his principal source, but verified and corrected his entries with the principal manuscript (PO/a). Greenstreet numbered the banners and the shields in different series.⁷ There is no analysis, but it gives the names of the persons behind the arms, when available, as written in the legends. It also gives the folio and number on the folio in both of his sources.

There is an additional transcription, not consulted, by Robert W. Mitchell in 1982 for the Heraldry Society of Scotland in his series of armorials from Oxford, Queen's College, Ms.158 (PO/b). This transcription was not expected to provide relevant information when the three manuscripts and the Greenstreet transcription were available.

2.1 The presumed original - PO/a

The principal manuscript, Oxford, Bodleian Library, Ashmole 804, part iv, is a book of 28 leaves of vellum, each 140 x 300 mm, slightly longer and only 2/3 the width of a modern A4 page. It contains 672 items, painted in four rows of three (3x4), 12 to the page. The first 45 are painted on rectangular banners, the remaining on narrow shields. There are multiple numberings on the pages; the one used here is by folio and consecutive item. The contents has been divided into two segments, 01 painted on banners, 02 painted on shields, and interspaced 03 for some items, that belong to peers extinct at the proposed time of collation.

The Bodleian Library has made a digitized facsimile available on http://bodley30.bodley.ox.ac.uk:8180/luna/servlet/view/search;jsessionid=D13568DC007C144ED153F3FF954B3CCA?q=Shelfmark="MS.%20Ashmole%20804%2C%20pt.%20IV; but easier found through their digital catalogue. They also provide a description of each page with a transcription of the hard to read names.

There are legends over the arms in a contemporary hand (A, 14C gothic) for the first five pages containing both banners and shields, the rest in another, probably contemporary hand (B, cursive) with retouching in a later similar hand (C, cursive). There are some later corrections, rewrites and/or additions with different inks. The few anonymous entries appear to be marked with a dot within a circle. The first 14 pages, items 1-168, are richly illuminated using gold and silver, while the remaining pages are more plainly coloured, but not of lower quality in respect of drawing and execution. The colours are faded and the silver blackened. Some yellows are almost white. There is some abrasive damage and occasional signs of water damage, if not corrections. The style of the eagles is very early, and they are very thinly drawn. The lions, passant, rampant or guardant, and the griffins are more timeless in style.

The coats of arms are in general identical to the ones commonly accepted as the arms of the family, branch or individual, though as discussed below, some brisures require scrutiny. Only a couple of entries could not be converted to intelligible family names. Some additional names could not be verified. The attribution of a few more, solely on names and a feeling of where they belong, may be questioned.⁸

2.2 The early copy - PO/b

Robert Glover, Somerset Herald, made copies of several armorials in the possession of the College of Arms in London. One of these, copied in 1584 'from an ancient book of arms on parchment', went into the end of a volume of miscellaneous armorials now recorded as Oxford, Queen's College, Ms.158, pages 649-679. This part contains 440 entries, 4x4, 16 to the page, of which 62 are tricked (pp.649-655n14, among nos.40-252) and 378 are with names only (655n15-679n9).

In the opinion of Wagner, it was from an intermediate or parallel version, but it may as well have been a selective extract of the principal copy - or a copy an equally selective older copy. The tricked items follow the same order as PO/a, but has many unexplainable gaps: nos.42-43, 54, 58, 60, 62, 65-68, 72, 74-75, 84, 86-87, 90, 92-111, 121-126, 129-159, 161-167, 170, 172-179, 182-188, 190-191, 219, 242. There are further gaps in the 'names only' section. Apart from the omission of the peers in the banner section, there is no obvious reason as to why some items were selected in preference to others. Glover included the peers entered as nos.193-229, including a reconstructed Furnival in #193.

2.3 The modern copy - PO/c

The copy made in 1812 by the Rev. David Thomas Powell is currently available as London, British Library, Add.26677, painted on vellum with finely drawn figures and a light, sometimes sketchy, colouring. It follows the principal copy, but with a different layout, 4x5, 20 to the page, on 34 pages of arms. The booklet contains 42 pages; of which the first page has the shelfmark and a note as Lot 3 at the Wellesley sale of 12. January 1865, fo.1r-2r the 45 banners, fo.2v a text, pages 1(r) - 31(r) for the shields, and fo.19r-21r list the names as per page.

The two 'names only' items (nos. 3, 4) and seven others (nos. 147, 205, 246, 252, 259, 269, 345) were omitted, and ten moved within the sequence (nos. 139, 195, 222, 229, 230, 238, 239, 240, 333, 487). Item 40 is repeated once. There are some 15 other changes, mostly of minor importance. In toto there are mistakes on almost each page up to page 28. From there on, he appears to have changed his mode of work, because there are no further mistakes.

3. The period of collation

One has to differentiate between collation, gathering the arms of contemporaries by observation, and compilation, selecting and ordering arms from available sources. There is of course an overlap between the two in the process of making an armorial - unless it was created solely from older material. The coats of arms in present armorial appears to have been gathered by personal observation of contemporaries, though there are indications that the compiler, who is anonymous and probably also the collator, may have used older material for some items - or may have used this for getting the arms of people, for which he knew the name and provenience, but not their arms.

Assuming that the arms were gathered by observation, we only need to select a few names or combinations of arms and names, which would be specific for a given period, to get the putative limits of collation - as William Black did in 1845, viz. 1345-51. The boundary condition for the period is that all identifiable persons in the compilation should have been active within the stated period or if dead before, have died within so narrow a time, that the collator may reasonably have been unaware of his demise. Persons, who died without male heirs of their blood, are especially useful. In practice, this is an iterative process.

Nine items, all peers, were selected for the first iteration (nos. 5, 6, 12, 14, 18, 23, 26, 44). Except for #14 the E.Huntingdon and perhaps #44 Montagu, the combinations of arms and title would have been in use over more than one generation. William Clinton was a one-off. He was created E.Huntingdon in 1337 and died 1354, establishing an outer limit. The ermine field for Montagu may have been used by other members of the family, but Edward Montagu (o.s.p.m. 1361), who was summoned in person to Parliament for the first time in 1348, is not only in support, but narrows the interval on one side from 1341 to 1348.

Among the less known peers was #18 Thomas Wake (1298-1349), the last of his line. As brother-in-law of Henry of Grosmont E.Lancaster, who was a cousin of the king, and a trusted military commander and administrator of Aquitaine, the death of Thomas Wake would have been known to any observer with some relation to the court or royal administration, and the collator/compiler may have been in such a position. The elevation of #5 Henry of Grosmont to D.Lancaster in 1351 was probably the reason for that year to be chosen as the putative end limit. Wake shortens this to 1349.

Pre-empting the discussion of the peerage and especially the baronage, it is evident that as a general rule the compiler excluded minors.⁹ Including the three royal boys (nos. 2-4) who might be included as courtesy to the Crown. That John of Gaunt (b.1340), but not Edmund of Langley (b.1342), was included, is hardly of importance. #12 Lawrence Hastings E.Pembroke (d.30.08.1348) is another person, whose death would not escape a contemporary.¹⁰ He left a baby son.

The remaining key persons selected above supports both the limits of Black and the 1348 date proposed here. #6 John Plantagenet E.Kent (o.s.p.1352) was in Parliament from 1349, the next earl was only created in 1360. #23 is B.Stafford, who was created E.Stafford in 1351. #26 is B.Mortimer, created E.March in 1354. The son was forgiven the excesses of his father as lover-confidante of the queen. To this we may add that #9 FitzAlan E.Arundel only quartered his family arms with that of Warenne after 1347. Adding one of the gentry, #360 Thomas Courdray died 1349.

One must consider not only the people in the armorial, but also those excluded or forgotten. In this case, there are 45 putative peers, but one would expect more.¹¹ One of the one-offs, Hugh Audley E.Gloucester, o.s.p.m.1347, is missing. He succeeded to the title in part due to his wife Eleanor, sister and coheir of Gilbert de Clare (d.1314), the last earl of that line. It took half a century before the next E.Gloucester was created.¹²

In summary, the collator may have gathered names and arms over a long period of time and he may have used written and painted sources in addition to his own observations, but as compiler he must have selected and structured the persons and arms, which were to be included in his armorial during the year 1348. How long it took to make it, why it was made and for whom, we can only speculate on.

4. 'Extinct' and odd entries

Not all entries fit the proposed collation-compilation period of 1348. They fall in three categories: extinct lineages, contradictory entries, and coats of arms that may have been misattributed or entries that may have been modified, added later or extracted from earlier compilations.

4.1 Titles in abeyance by 1348

The easiest set to dispose of is that of the twelve entries on fo. 25v (nos. 589-600). They did not have any labels when painted. Most of the arms were correctly identified by a later owner as extinct lineages of earls and major feudal barons. The lion with a forked tail in #594 'at wod' must refer to the two Simons Montfort l'Amaury that held the earldom of Leicester from 1205-1265.¹³ The intention behind the choice of legend for these arms escapes all imagination.

The legend 'therkyld' for #600 Argent a maunch gules is much easier to explain. This coat of arms should logically belong to the Tony family, which came over with the Conqueror in 1066, settled in Hertfordshire, and played an important role in English affairs until they became extinct in 1309. The heiress eventually married Guy Beauchamp E. Warwick (1271-1315). The Threlkelds of Threlkeld (Cumb) were important landowners in the Lake District of Cumbria. William (d.1371) must have been living at the time of collation, and his grandson and successor William (d.1409) could well have been known to the writer (hand B) of the legend.

The preceding entry, #599, was identified by hand B as Patrick Chaworth (o.s.p.m.1283). A substantial landowner, well-represented in armorials, but hardly among the unforgettable - apart from the fact that his daughter Maud (d.1317) married Henry E. Lancaster (d.1322), uncle of Henry of Grosmont (#5). The third and last non-titled lineage in the set is Geneville (#595) with arms like their French ancestors and cousins, the Joinvilles.

One entry (a cinquefoil, #590) is not really a coat of arms, but a badge placed on a shield. Both the figure of arms and its legend 'bossew', meaning hunchback, point to the earldom of Leicester and its first holders from Beaumont-le-Roger (dep Eure). Robert (III) 'Bossu' (1104-68) and his grandson Robert (IV) 'FitzPernell' (d.1203/04) held that title, and the badge, a pimperl, is canting and refers to Petronella Grandmesnil, mother of Robert (IV). Their cousins held the earldom of Warwick (#589) until 1242.

The earldoms of Winchester (#591), Ulster (#592), and Lincoln (#598) were also in abeyance in 1348. Pembroke was at the time granted to Hastings (#12) after Valence (#593) became extinct in 1324. Wales (#597) is a step higher as a principality, and Ormond (#596) was only granted to James Butler in 1315 - the only active title-lineage combination in the set.

4.2 Contradictory entries

Besides the extinct lineages mentioned above, there are a number of entries where the members of a family and/or branch are fairly well-known, but where the Christian names does not fit a person who was active close to 1348. It does not matter much if a small percentage of the entries belong to people, who died a year or two before the estimated period of compilation - if they were of moderate stature, and it can be assumed that their demise would take some time to be known outside their locality. The time-span between the day of dying and a writ of inquisition post-mortem to be issued for a tenant-in-chief is one parameter to be considered, but one should bear in mind that there may be a difference between how fast a sheriff needed to inform the chancery and treasury of a potential income and how fast it would become general knowledge.

There are at least three types of contradictions to be considered. Firstly, if the entry was modified during copying, a descendant or relative, better known to the copyist, may have been substituted. Pseudo-transposition or exchanging a name with one mentioned slightly above also belongs to this type. Secondly, could it be an instance of finding an extinct lineage worthy of incorporation, e.g. as on fo. 25v as mentioned above. The third type can be split into three: a known, but now dead person, an entry extracted from an earlier source (armorial) and a minor as the only contemporary. The second will be discussed in the next sub-chapter and the latter in the chapter on the baronage.

Apart from the 12 items on fo.25v there are about 18 entries (3%) that qualify as potentially contradictory. Most entries are related to people of baronial status. A couple may be simple changes of names for relatives (nos. 357 Knoville, 622 Clavering) or taken from older sources (nos. 613 Huntercombe, 620 Manners). Three may be people without great stature, whose death were unknown to the compiler, though some years did pass: #287 Ralph Shirley (d.1342), who also had property in Norfolk, #479 John Murdach (d.1342), and #667 Ralph Gorges (d.1344). Five are related to important people of the generation of grandfathers (nos. 587 Kyme, 618 Inge), or having highly noble widows still living (nos. 540 Badlesmere, 630 Tattershall, 562 Frene). #419 Otto Grandison, who left England in 1313 in protest of the influence of Piers Gaveston on Edward II was perhaps the most illustrious member of the family, which has several members in this armorial. The last four were ‘merely’ barons (nos. 512 Moels, 518 Tweng, 555 Monthermer, 609 Teyes), but men of substance and importance in their time.

4.3 Collating and compiling

It is often assumed, either explicitly or tacitly, that the arms and names in an armorial were gathered (collated) by the compiler. Few modern editors or commentators, if any, have contemplated how such a process did proceed. The obvious process would require that the collator noted arms and names as he met people on his travels or attended a tournament or the mustering of an army. If the latter, he could recall his observations when or if he wanted to make a memorial of the men who took part in an engagement. When discussing the Gelre and Bellenville armorials, Léon Jéquier argued for Gelre Herald and the Bellenville-compiler taking notes during their travels.¹⁴ What he did not discuss was how the herald did his notes. He would hardly carry paint and brushes around between horses and armed men mulling around between bushes and fences, but he could make hasty sketches or even better write rough blazons on scraps of vellum or paper. Anthony Wagner was clearly of the opinion that notes were taken during the actual occasion: “[occasional armorials] were blazoned and without paintings, presumably because the record had to be made quickly while the occasion lasted. For the same reason they are the most trustworthy. They rest on eyewitness and probably professional evidence, and the persons named should be precisely identifiable”.¹⁵ His comment may even be construed as implying that the collator-compiler finished the armorial on site, but that would probably be over interpreting his intention. It is more likely that both held that the notes were rapidly made into their final form.¹⁶

In his discussion of the classification of armorials on the same page Wagner observes that some armorials contains retrospective elements as well as contemporary, “of one date” in his words. He does not need to mention the obvious fact that many entries in armorials do not have legends (owner’s names), but this could be a crucial element in the analysis of an armorial, especially on whether it is a copy; or how the arms and names were obtained. One may add that it is rare that armorials in blazon only do not have legends on all entries. Consideration of unidentifiable entries, the ordering of entries, legibility of potential sources, spelling of (foreign) names only heard, and the possibility of misunderstanding blazons unfinished or in shorthand are also needed.

Most armorials have a number of unidentifiable entries as well as named entries for which there are no available information that may be used to verify the name-arms combination. This is unsatisfactory, but rarely a great obstacle or problem in the dating or evaluation of a compilation. Named entries can often be assigned to a family with no known arms with a bit of educated guesswork. This is often done by comparing the name and a reasoned guess of its territorial affiliation with documentation of a similarly named family’s holdings and history. The outstanding, and generally accepted, examples of such a procedure can be found in the Wijnberghen armorial, where the editors Paul Adam-Even and Léon Jéquier based much identification on lists of names in a single printed source.¹⁷

4.4 Templates of arms or earlier source?

Do the order and identifications always make sense? That is a question one must ask whether as reader or editor. The overall order in the present armorial is simple. Peers (royals, earls and barons) have banners; the others, including bannerets, have shields. There are different hands in the legends to the two segments in PO/a. The gothic minuscule of hand A has the legends of all peers on ff.1r-2v with a spill-over to knights on fo. 3r, except for #58 and #60, which suggests that there was a pause in writing legends after all arms were painted, and that another scribe took over. There may have been a problem in identifying the two as Hemenhale and FitzNicol. Neither is in the cursive of hand B. #58 Hemenhale is in a modern hand and the legend for #60 'robert fitz neell' in a near contemporary hand (not hand C, another cursive), the owner of which must have known this Buckinghamshire family with the recurring name Robert; or have had access at least to a list of the names before he could pinpoint the owner of the arms by his christian name.

The entries in the second segment are almost certainly knights, not only because of the recurring abbreviation 'sr', which may as well like the occasional 'sour' and 'sire' refer to their social standing as owner of manors (seigneur, lord) as to the knightly 'sir'. Nearly all the identifiable entries are for people who are documented as having performed the duties required of knights in the administration of the counties. They served on juries, on juridical (e.g. Oyer and Terminer / inquiry and judgement, of Peace, statutes of Labour, and of Winchester) and technical (e.g. Wallis et Fossatis / fortifications and canals) commissions, and occasionally as tax collectors or county representatives in Parliament. Though there are subseries of people from the same county, there is no indication of a territorial structure.

It is fairly common in England to omit the christian name of an incumbent of a title or a lordship. After all, there can be only one Earl Whatshisname at a time. So the large number of entries without a christian name need not imply that the notes (source?) were illegible. The few anonymous entries in PO/a appear to be marked with a dot within a circle - possibly for later investigation?

Most of the serried entries of a family, which have brisures suggesting sons or brothers, come in the natural order of parent, older and younger members, except in four cases, where the presumed younger member precedes the older one. The examples are #137/136 Oldhall, #183/175 Antingham, #205/98 Latimer, and #515/503 Lovell. Neither these nor the ten potential repeats of entries are evidence that the PO/a was copied from a version (or source) with a different layout, but it has to be considered.

However, there are three indications that one or more older armorials may have been used as a source or template for the coats of arms painted with certain names, and that the compiler may in a few cases have succumbed to the temptation to add men of another generation to his presentation. The first and most simple can be found in #531 for William Anne. The arms, Or 3 birds sable between 2 bend(lets) sable, is difficult to blazon. Another version could read Or a bend or fimbriated sable charged with 3 birds sable ranged per bend. The actual coat was probably A bend cotised charged 3 parrots. But it is not the figurative image that causes a problem, but the tinctures given. It follows the rule of colour on metal, but is different from other versions attributed to this rather modest Oxfordshire family. The usual version of tinctures has the field gules, the bend and cotises argent and the birds vert or sinople as common for parrots. Depending on the colorants used, red (gules) may fade into a yellowish hue and silver or lead white turn to black (sable) with time. There is no indication of blackening on this or adjoining pages, so the Or-Sable combination must be the choice of the compiler, and most likely due to his reading of a now lost aged source.¹⁸

The second indication can be split into two. (1) Guy Penre or Peure in #617 with Or 3 bends gules and a label azure could not be documented, but the combination of the name and nearly identical arms (only 2 bends) are known from GA:161, a memorial to an engagement on the Scottish Marches in 1300.¹⁹ (2) There is a trio of Seymour al. St. Maur in #583 Lawrence, #585 Nicholas and #639 Thomas. The names and arms of the first two can be found in both contemporary armorials and those of the reign of Edward I. The only Thomas of interest is the son of Nicholas (d.1316) who was summoned as a baron in 1314, and was active during the lifetime of his father Lawrence (d.c.1297). All the arms include a label, either azure or vert, tinctures that are hard to discriminate and unlikely to have been used at the same time. There are no satisfactory contemporary or earlier representations of the plain arms Argent 2 chevrons gules, so we cannot be sure whether this branch had a label as a permanent brisure, but at a time Lawrence did have a label on his seal as in the armorials.²⁰ Assuming that the two entries #585 and #639 are for the brothers Thomas (1303-58) and Nicholas (c.1314-61), son of the baron Nicholas (d.1316), and that #583 Lawrence was transferred accidentally when arms for Nicholas were extracted for #585, we still need to account for the sequence of the brothers and their arms. The younger brother Nicholas, #585, only succeeded (i.e. was summoned in person) in 1351 and had a surbrisure of roundels on the label, while the elder Thomas, #639, who was never summoned, had the label plain. This apparent mistake was probably not a mistake at all. Contemporaries may have thought that Nicholas as son of the second wife Ellen Zouche held the superior title and station even though peerages were not invariably heritable at the time. Nicholas senior was only summoned shortly after his marriage to a coheir of Alan Lord Zouche. Extinct earldoms and parliamentary 'baronages' tended to go through female descendants.

The third indication is fuzzier. It includes the potential contradictory entries mentioned above, where Christian names may have been changed, but also some homonymous entries where the name-arms combinations could not be verified or where the only corroboration were temp. Edward I. The following examples are not hard evidence, but only subjective arguments. A Bracebridge family with Vairy argent-sable & fess gules and possessions in Warws, Lincs and Suffolk is mentioned in a dozen armorials from 1300-1400, but not in Powell. The #588 William Bracebridge with a cross patonce has not been verified, but would fit with William (fl.1357) son of John (fl.1311-37) and the double legend in a version of E:624 for this John and John Bohun of Midhurst being a conflation of two items in the source or draft of the Stirling Roll. However, the tinctures are argent-gules and or-azure, which require a further misreading.²¹ The second example concerns #429 Robert Colville of Blakan, another un-verifiable item, which present a similar tincture problem. N:711 Robert Colville of Dale, a cadet of Colville of Bitham has Or fess gules acc. 3 roundels gules in chief, which apart from the tinctures is not far from N:707 Baldwin Pigot of Dodington (Lincs) with Azure 2 bars or acc. 3 roundels or in chief - the arms in #429. Misreading and transposing names is a possibility. There are a few other examples, but of less obvious character. The 3 cinquefoils in pale for #37 Bardolf replacing the usual 2:1 pattern suggests that the images were painted from a written not painted source.

5. The baronage

The terms 'baron' and 'lord' are ambiguous. Modern usage, as noted in most entries and in the supplements to The Complete Peerage (GEC 4:649-756, 5:787-791, 12.1S:2-3) presumes that peerages, with baron as the lowest rank, are hereditary. These are the parliamentary barons or lords, men summoned in person by name to the emergent upper house of the Parliament and later spoken of and addressed as Lord MySurname.²² Medieval practice shows that such summonses were not considered hereditary until after the Lancastrian Revolution and the accession of Henry IV in 1399. Male sons and heirs were not necessarily summoned even when of age and under aged boys in wardship were never summoned. In a few instances an eldest son could be summoned during the lifetime of his father. On the other hand, a grandchild might get enough stature to be summoned either with the same title as his forebears or a new one. Marriage to an heiress of a peer, earl or baron, is often associated with a summons to the husband or a descendant, and for the title bestowed. The words baron and lord were seldom mentioned as a title by contemporary officialdom, but is used here as a convenient short term.²³ Beside these lay barons, bishops and certain 'mitred' abbots were also regarded as parliamentary barons.

The other use of the word 'baron' was as a description of wealth. A feudal baron, sometimes mentioned as baron of MyPlace, would have extensive lands, vassals and associates, and be a political power locally as well as on a national basis.²⁴ The original baronies (and the number of knight's fees assigned to them over the years) established after the conquest were by 1200 mostly divided into relatively small parts held by different families.²⁵ The term barony was still used by the royal administration for relations in the fee system of tenants-in-chief, who were originally holding baronies or fiefs directly from the king, their tenants and subtenants. Family ties, e.g. with one of the dozen earls, would help to enhance one's status.

Besides Parliament, men of status and influence, feudal barons, bannerets (military captains) and the king's familiars, could be summoned in person to 'great councils'. These were called to discuss major policy issues, but without the interference of other legal or tax issues associated with meetings of the Parliament - and summons to great councils did not count as membership of the peerage. Burgesses and knights were also summoned or designated by sheriffs. One such great council is referred to in the commentary to many of the entries, the council held in Winchester in 1324 to discuss measures to an emergency caused by French intrusion into Aquitaine and the threat of a general Anglo-French confrontation in the last years of the reign of Edward II, the so-called War of Saint-Sardos.²⁶

The number of lay barons varied over time, but on average there were a dozen earls and about 50 barons. When a line became extinct or lost influence, a member of another family would be summoned or created in its place. The summons to Parliament of February 14th 1348 listed 11 earls and 30 barons largely overlapping the present list.²⁷ The next summons of November 20th had 10 earls and 56 barons.²⁸ Lawrence Hastings E.Pembroke (#12) had died on August 20th and was omitted. The Powell armorial has 13 earls but only 18 barons the segment with banners. One of the two 'supernumerary' earls is Hugh Courtenay E.Devon (#17), who was also omitted in 1344.²⁹ The other, John E.Kent (#6) was a minor, but of royal blood, so it was natural for the compiler to include him together with the sons and cousin of Edward III. Most of the remaining barons summoned in 1348 are in the armorial, but distributed throughout, e.g. #201 Thomas Brewes and #511 Roger Hussey. One of the barons newly summoned in 1347, Walter Mauny (#27) is among the banner holders, while another Thomas Bradston (#416) is not. The former was already a renowned captain, but Thomas was also a notable courtier and a friend of the king as one of the co-plotters of the 1330 coup. John St.Philibert and Philip Darcy are left out of the armorial as are the two Bartholmews Burghersh, one of whom was chamberlain, Constable of Dover and Warden of the Cinque Ports. The 'banners' section include two entries for bannerets. John Chiverston (#35) was never a baron, but as the first Captain of Calais in 1347 an important military figure commanding this newly acquired foothold on the Continent. John Norwich (#40) was an old hand in court circles, brother-in-law to Robert Ufford E.Suffolk (#11), and eventually summoned in 1360.

6. Selected families and their brisures

Many of the armorials from the reign of Edward I are occasional, and several can be related to musters and campaigns against the Scots. Active military service require mostly fit young men, who can endure long days in the saddle wearing heavy armour, so one would expect a substantial number of sons in any listing, and as a consequence a substantial number of coats of arms with differences.³⁰ Later armorials can rarely be related to military campaigns, though there are a few listing participants at tournaments. From mid 14th century one can detect a change of interest among the compilers. They move from collecting arms of individuals to describing family arms.³¹ The Powell armorial stands at the beginning of this change. It lists individuals and has a high proportion of arms with brisures, almost every third entry.

There is no agreement on how to grade brisures or how to define whether a difference is a measure of contemporary relations (brisure for a son, brother, nephew, uncle) or has been solidified into arms heritable in a branch.³² In some cases of the latter surcharges (surbrisures) can be found on or in addition to the principal brisure. One system of a three-tiered grading has the major brisures as change of tincture on field and/or on principal figure of arms, addition of bend, fess, border, chief and canton. The fess, bend and chief are also figures of arms in their own right. Medium brisures would be the label, powdering and multiple charges or indentation on a major brisure, with minor brisures (incl. surbrisures) comprising single small charges placed on or adjacent to a figure of arms or brisure. Comparing documented lineages with armorial evidence shows that the actual use of the three tiers is overlapping. A major brisure may be used by a younger brother in one family, but designate a sub-branch in another. By 1350 the latter situation (branch rather than individual) should be expected for most families. Individuals tended to bear surbrisures on the coat of arms used by their branch.³³

When the reader has only a single entry with a brisure and a written or at least probable christian name in a single armorial before him or her, it is not only tempting, but natural to assign that brisure to this person. It is even better when further evidence can be found in e.g. on the same page in the DBA. However, if one examines the available evidence of a family's use of arms in toto a number of contradictory variants will often appear.³⁴ In some cases a person's use of several arms can be explained as due to succession or change of status, in other cases, especially with absence of brisures, as carelessness by the compiler or artisan. This still leaves a number of cases when the editor (and the reader as well) has to make up his own opinion on which brisure(s) the person was most likely to have used. A couple of examples are discussed below.

6.1 Brisures and relationships

The Powell armorial has 174 entries with major and medium brisures, some with surcharges or surbrisures and in addition 33 with minor brisures.³⁵ Among them are a large number of differences which must go several generations back. In many if not most cases their origin cannot be determined, e.g. Staunton of Staunton, who claimed to hold in Nottinghamshire in 1048 and used a bordure engrailed in #281. Little is known of their armorial practice except that this difference was recorded in 1614 and omitted by 1660. If one wants to get an idea of the mid-14th century use of brisures within a family, it is better to look at the 55 sets of 2-3 entries per family and the 4 families with more, which count for 206 entries.³⁶

The four brisures among the Greys are of an older date being the arms of four branches (Codnor, Wilton, Rotherfield, and Sandiacre) descended from four sons of Henry Grey of Thurrock (d.c.1216), but the seven entries poses two problems of interpretation. #208 'grey of codnor' is proposed here for Robert, a younger brother of John B.Grey of Codnor (#28 'grey'), a baron of some standing and a founder KG. Both have the ³¹ The term family has a diffuse meaning including what is strictly defined as branches and sub-branches of a lineage. See Clemmensen EA 1:309-318 for a discussion of the trend. Post-1400 ordinaries like TJ and WJ of may include entries with personal brisures as they were compiled largely from older material.

undifferenced Grey of Codnor arms Barry argent-azure. But did the brothers both use the undifferenced arms? Their uncle Nicholas Grey of Barton (d.1327), the only other younger son of this branch, is well documented. He bore the Grey arms with a bend compony Ar/Or-gules in N:414 and O:92, which may be interpreted as a paraphrase of the Grey of Rotherfield arms (nos. 29, 210). In addition, all the Greys descended from Henry 'of Thurrock' for whom we have evidence, have individual brisures. This sounds better than it is, as the available pedigrees are mostly single-stranded. The Wilton branch split off Ruthin before 1320. An alternative interpretation is that the two pairs #28/208 and #29/210 are in fact double extracts from the same template. There are another half dozen instances of probable double entries.

It is difficult to establish the relationships within several of the family sets because our knowledge of the membership of most medieval families is limited. The two Antingham entries without christian names could be for #175 Bartholomew, a crescent for difference, and his father Roger (#183) with the undifferenced arms, but the sequence would be unnatural with a son preceding his father. A Nicholas is mentioned mostly as a felon, but with an association to members of the notable families Erpingham and Ilketshall, which also had their sets nearby. The name is common in the family, which appears to have had several branches. Roger and Bartholomew must belong to the senior branch as they held the manor of Antingham. It is not possible to determine which of the possible combinations that is the correct one, but father and son is the more obvious choice. In other instances only a single name or even no names were found in the references consulted.

The difference, a crescent, in #175 Antingham is a minor surbrisure of a type that was coming into standard use at the time, mainly for younger sons. The Parliamentary Roll (N/PAR) of c.1312 has only a few entries with surbrisures of this type. A simple count of the differences likely to represent close relatives, e.g. a son, brother or cousin, yields the following distribution: 21 labels, 24/26 minor brisures, and 14 other medium or major brisures. There are 9 pairs using identical (i.e. basic) arms as well as some probable repeats and 36 brisures of older adoption in Appendix B.³⁷ There are rather few sets of father and sons in the armorial. Several of the 26 'sons' can only be proposed to have this relationship for the nature of the brisure. No documentation has been found, and in some cases not even a christian name. Some were at the time probably brothers rather than sons of the senior representative, and acting in their own right, e.g. the Waltons in nos. 404, 579. Nine of the 'established' sons belong to very notable families, incl. the four treated separately. At least one father-son pair (nos. 94 Gilbert, 96 William Aton) must have been included as a tribute to a very old, but important, northern feudal baron, who inherited the vast Vescy estates. At the age of nearly 50, his son William must have taken over most of the practical affairs, though he had to wait twenty-some years before he was summoned as a baron.

Even relatively well-known families and personalities pose problems. The John Clifford in #83 is merely proposed on the twin basis of being known for a martial exploit, and being almost the only contemporary person found in the consulted references. The blazon of the arms is also unsupported.

Walter Pavely (#246) presents a different problem. This is a name of a founder knight of the Garter, a name well-known to contemporaries, but without (other) contemporary evidence of his coat of arms. He ought to be the one included in the armorial, except that the legend reads: 'sr walter pauly stratton'. There is some uncertainty of which of the several Pavely families he belonged to, and the later Bruges's Garter Book of c.1430 has the arms wrong.³⁸ His most recent biography states that he came from a Northamptonshire family, and not from the Wiltshire one.³⁹ We know the arms ascribed to both as well as arms of a third family with properties in Somerset and Devon.⁴⁰ All three families are knightly and two have several Walters in their pedigrees. Unfortunately the Nhants family does not have any known Walters, but they had a Lawrence attending the great council in 1324. For a solution to this puzzle we need, like his biographers, to look at affinities, properties and inheritances. The KG Walter (IV, 1319-75) was a younger son, who served with the baronial Bartholomews Burghersh, father and son, and his mother was a Burghersh heiress as well, niece and cousin to the former. She brought the family properties in Nhants and in Kent (Boughton Aluph), where his parents Walter (III, d.1327) and Maud (c.1304-1366) were buried.⁴¹ The references to Reginald born c.1301, died 1347, who came into his inheritance in 1323, was at great council 1324, married Alice and held Westbury (Wilts) are probably to his older half-brother Reginald (III). Westbury is also mentioned for another Reginald (I, d.1280), grandfather or great grandfather of Walter (IV).⁴² The simplest explanation is that Walter (IV, 1319-75) of the Westbury (Wilts) lineage is the Knight of the Garter, and that his father Walter (III, d.1327) represented his wife's inheritance in Nhants, while the eldest son Reginald (III, c.1301-47) represented the patrimony in Wilts at the great council in Winchester of 1324. The compiler did not know of, or more likely was not interested in the upcoming KG, but for reasons unknown chose another Walther of the rather minor knightly family which held Biggenhall (Som) and Stratton (Dorset) for his #246.

The four Stapletons (nos. 121, 123, 181, and 231) have two Miles and two uncertain with a nice set of brisures: the basic coat, an ubiquitous medium (label), and two minor brisures, which would lead the unwary to find a father and his three sons. The competing versions of the pedigree do not interfere in the present identifications.⁴³ The active periods of the possible family members only allow for two brothers and a cousin, Miles (III, d.1364, KG), Brian (I, d.1394), and Miles (II, d.1372). An uncle John Stapleton of Melsonby (fl.1327) is hardly a viable proposal, so #231 'Miles' is probably a repeat - or an insert of their grandfather Miles (I, d.1314) of Haddesley (Yorks.), who was summoned as baron the same year.

6.2 Beauchamp of Warwick

There are seven entries for members of the Bello Campo or Beauchamp of Elmley family in this armorial. The family, or lineage, is perhaps best known for the most illustrious branch: the earls of Warwick.⁴⁴ By the mid 14th century the larger family comprised four branches, each with a number of males, who all used personalized arms - including four Johns.⁴⁵ A first look suggested that only two branches had members included in the Powell armorial, but also that there might be contradictory evidence as to who bore which coat of arms, so an extensive survey of arms was performed.⁴⁶

⁴¹ Nicolas TV 106, testament of his son Walter (V, d.1379). It mentions a label either for Walter (III) or (IV).

⁴² The data in Moor KE 4:14-15 and Brault RAE 2:332 are conflicting, i.e. ascribing E:503 (of 1285) to Reginald / Reynold (I, d.1280). Walter (II) and (III), reported dead 1323 and 1327, may be the same person, but Reginald (II, fl.1285, proposed here) and (III) are unlikely to be. It is unlikely that Walter (II, d.1323) born c.1250 should father Walter (IV) born 1319, who would attend council in 1324. The persons can be shuffled around awaiting further data and Joan could be the first wife of Walter (III), mother of Reginald (III), who came into his inheritance in 1323.

The use of arms by the Beauchamp branches has been little studied, except - or because - of a short clear expose by Anthony Wagner, who distributed 21 coats of arms between members of four branches active between 1260 and 1508, when lineage became extinct.⁴⁷ Two brothers (William and Giles), who were assigned four and five different arms respectively, are candidates for entries in the Powell. The present count of (non-quartered) variants is now 30, up from the 19 enumerated by Wagner, who has two pairs, which ought to be regarded as minor variations (engrailed for indented, mullet pierced or not).

The first ancestor on English soil is said to be a Hugh Beauchamp in the following of William the Conqueror, who settled in the Midlands and sired two principal lines or branches: the Beauchamps of Bedford and those of Elmley (Worcestershire).⁴⁸ There is little excitement with the latter family until William of Elmley (III, d.1268) married Isabel Mauduit and sired four sons, each generating a cadet branch. Isabel was niece and heir of William Mauduit E.Warwick (d.1268).⁴⁹

The eldest son, William (VI, c.1238-98), inherited Elmley and the hereditary shrievalty of Worcestershire from his parents and was created E.Warwick in 1368. This became the senior or Warwick branch using Gules a fess or between 6 crosslets or (2, a1). The persons of interest are Thomas 3E.Warwick (II, d.1369, #10), his eldest son Guy (II, d.1351, #469), his brother John (IV, d.1460, #385), his second son Thomas (III, d.1401, 4E, #471). There is a second entry for an E.Warwick in #463.

The next son, Walter of Alcester & Powick (III, d.1303), became ancestor of the Powick (Worcs) branch, and of the Bletsoe (Beds) and St.Amand sub-branches - all eventually of baronial rank, and using Gules a fess or between 6 martlets or. The exact relation between the Powick and Bletsoe branches are disputed. The proposed entries cover Giles (d.1361, #387) and his son John (V, d.1378/1401, #394). Roger of Bletsoe (I, d.1380) and William (V, o.s.p.), an elder brother of Giles, could also be of interest.⁵⁰

The descendants of the third son, John (d.1297), ancestor of the Holt (Worcs) branch, using Gules a fess or between 6 billets or, do not appear be to of interest to the Powell Roll. Neither do those of the fourth son James (d.1292), here as Elmley-junior branch - but all four branches are crucial for discussing their use of arms. Anthony Wagner does not give the full pedigree of the family until its extinction in the male line in 1508, which is fully acceptable considering his purpose.⁵¹ There is no evidence of branches or alternative uses of arms of the Beauchamp of Elmley before William (III, d.1268), to whom Anthony Wagner assigned the simple Gules a fess or (1, j1) as parent arms for the family.⁵² Quite unusually, the youngest (Elmsley-junior) from James (d.1292) kept the parent arms with a label. One would have thought that it would have been perpetuated in the senior branch. The most probable explanation is that the three elder sons were active before their father died in 1368 and had already chosen (or been given) their brisures. That would still give them about 30 years of active life.

Only a few explanations are needed in order to account for the assignment of arms to these seven entries. The label argent for John (V) of Powick in #394 would be straightforward as son of Giles in #387 with Powick undifferenced. William (V, o.s.p.), elder brother of Giles and using a label azure, would still be living, but he might have retired from active life and allowed a more vital younger brother with a male heir to act a head of the branch. He and his brothers probably changed his arms over time, but that is another story. One of the series suggested for the brothers Walter (IV, o.s.p.1328), William (V) and Giles

⁴⁸ The Beauchamps of Bedford used different arms, Quarterly or-gules a bend gules, and was extinct by 1265.

⁴⁹ The pedigrees are essentially those in Wagner ME 365 and in the GEC, see note 23, and Appendix C.

⁵¹ The pedigrees in App. C has also been culled, for a full (male) pedigree, see Clemmensen BW.

⁵² The arms are denoted with numbers by Wagner and letter-number combinations by Clemmensen. There is no real evidence for William (III) using the basic arms of Gules fess or, but it is a probable hypothesis.

with labels argent, azure and compony argent-azure would be expected as a standard variation of brisures for arms with a field gules.

The Warwick entries are more surprising. Not so much that the compiler may have used a template where Thomas (III) E.Warwick and his son Guy (II) - or William (IV) and Guy (I) - were mentioned together for #463 (doubling #10) and #469, but for including two under-aged sons, who were only knighted in 1355. Thomas the younger son was about 10 years at the time, and the eldest daughter of Guy was born 1353, suggesting that in 1348 he was probably no more than 14-16 years old.

6.3 Ufford

A well-established pedigree and christian names on five of the seven Uffords makes it fairly easy to identify the earl of Suffolk (#11) and his two cousins John and Edmund (#49, 51) of the Wrentham branch which differenced with a bend.⁵³ There is no evidence of a bend being used by members of the senior branch. The possible complications due to the common ancestry of the Uffords and the Peytons of Peyton Hall (Suffolk), who used identical arms and brisures, can be disregarded.⁵⁴ The Uffords were a junior, but more successful, branch of Peyton, but there are no indications that this parent family was included in the Powell.

The other two christian names are #169 Thomas (with a label) and #171 Walter (with crown for difference) followed by an anonymous #172. Walter (d. <1360) is a unique name among the known members of the family as the 3rd son of Robert (III, 1298-1369) E.Suffolk. We know little of his eldest brother Robert (IV), except that he was summoned to Parliament in 1341 and dead by 1368. Summons while the father lived was a rare occurrence and must have been due to the closeness of Robert (III) and the king. The above sequence suggests that #169 would be the 2nd brother Thomas (II, d.1368) and that #172 is the 4th brother and eventual successor William (II). This is a logical conclusion, but with a complication or two. William (II) was only born around 1339, some ten years after the marriage of Robert (III) and Margaret Norwich. This marriage is the only one mentioned in the GEC and Robert would have been 31 at the time, not unreasonable for an active warrior. On the other hand, when Robert was a minor, the king, Edward II, granted his marriage to Walter Norwich, father of Margaret - an investment. Robert was given seisin of his lands in 1318 and the father-in-law to be may have waited another 10 years before cashing in on this favour, but that would be unusual. It is more probable that Walter Norwich accepted an unrecorded marriage, but that when this unknown woman died, got the wanted family tie. John Norwich, the son and brother-in-law, was a close friend of the earl. A first marriage around 1318 would explain why Robert (IV) could get summons as a baron in 1341. At an age of 22 this would be unusual, but not improbable. A boy of eleven would never have been accepted as an equal by the barons even as son of an earl. Thomas (II) was elected KG in 1360, so the relatively low placing is commensurate with an early step in his career. If the label was indeed used by the eldest living son, it is a fair bet that Robert (IV) died between 1341 and 1348. Thomas (II) is one of the Uffords with several different arms assigned. He may have used a crescent, as in the continental GEL:628, while his elder brother lived.

The last item, #134 'ufforde' with the annulet for difference, probably belonged to the earl's youngest brother Edmund (I).⁵⁵ There was a brother John (I), of whom little is known. He may have been dead by 1348. The last of the earls' brothers, Ralph, died in 1346. He apparently spent a large part of his active life in Ireland and died there as Justiciar. He also made a fine marriage to Maud, sister of Henry of Grosmont E.Lancaster (#5), and widow of Richard de Burgh E.Ulster. Among the several brisures assigned to him, the fleur-de-lis must be the proper one. It is in CA:111, derived from a muster at Carlisle in 1334, and in a seal of Maud of 1347. The label mentioned in Brooke's Aspilogia is a mistaken assignment, rightly to his nephew Robert (IV). His annulet in SD:84 from the 2nd tournament at Dunstable also in 1334 is harder to explain, but could be transcription mistake from the compiler or from the source of the now extant 16th century copies. Finally there is a crescent in NS:80, but the 150 entries of nobles and gentry from the two counties Norfolk and Suffolk in this armorial appears to be a late attempt to make a register of the arms of local families rather than a c.1400 compilation as proposed by Anthony Wagner.⁵⁶ There are only two extant copies of the Norfolk & Suffolk Roll made in 1575 and 1580 by Richard Scarlett and Robert Glover, a painter and a herald respectively, probably from the same now lost source. A rough survey of items in the DBA, especially of the brisures of the Uffords, suggests that the NS compiler often got his brisures wrong.

6.4 Neville and Zouche

It would not be surprising to have these five Zouches in a compilation. William Zouche of Haringworth (1276-1352) in #36 was an elderly baron, summoned in 1308. It comes natural that his grandson and eventual successor William (1321-82) is included as #325. His father died 20 years earlier, so by 1348 he would be the principal representative of the family leading his own company in war and was summoned in late that year during the lifetime of his grandfather. His uncle Roger of Lubbesthorpe (#447) adopted a major brisure, changing gules-or into azure-or. Roger's son William (#456) added the almost standard label for an eldest son.

The relationship of Richard of Zouchemanor (Norfolk) as #330 to the Haringworth line is unclear. This Richard served with William jr. (#325) in Gascony in 1345 and became a king's knight in 1359. He may have lived until being at least 75 in 1396, when William 4B.Zouche of Haringworth inherited his properties. The Zouche branches primarily used major brisures for difference. A couple of labels and a single minor brisure (mullet) have been recorded.

The five northern Nevilles, who used a salire, belonged like the Beauchamps and the Uffords to families with an extensive use of minor brisures.⁵⁷ They are at the same time easy to identify and puzzling. One entry, #629 John of the junior Hornby (Yorks) branch used the arms with inverted tinctures argent-gules and belonged to a branch, which separated around 1260. This John may be unrecorded or confused with Robert (d.1373), who was summoned to great council in 1342, and inherited Hornby from his cousin John (o.s.p.1335).

The more successful senior Raby line with Gules salire argent was one of the two dominant magnates on the Northern Marches, holding sway over the west to middle part. The other family was the Percies in the east, which has only a single representative in the Powell armorial. Even though the Nevilles were barons of relatively long standing (first summoned in 1295), they are not included among the barons, but placed close together one third into the listing. The principal representative is #224 Ralph 2nd Lord Neville of Raby (1291-1367), who had served as steward of the royal household in 1331 and on the regency council in 1338-40, while the king was absent on the continent. The remaining three are his children, all minors in 1348: #232 John (c.1330-88, 1st son), #234 Robert of Elden (3rd son, o.s.p.), and #236 Ralph of Cundall (4th son, founder of the Thornton Bridge branch). The 2nd son Alexander (c.1332-92) entered the Church, became a canon in 1361 and Abp.York in 1374. The sequence 2, 4, 6 and their (under-)age are suggestive of a later insert into the listing at a time when the non-martial career of Alexander was certain, but before the 4th baron Ralph was created E.Westmoreland in 1397.

The Nevilles' use of brisures is of interest as one of the best documented families with multiple sons over several generations. More than 30 variations of the Neville arms are known from between 1250 and 1500, if we include the quartered coats of the later years.

However, if we try to assign ownership to the arms found on seals, in armorials, in books or on monuments, the harvest is less satisfactory.⁵⁸ The arms used by several members are undocumented, and there are a few cases of multiple attributions of arms to a single person, e.g. Alexander (I, d.1367) with a martlet of varying tinctures or a crescent; and the questionable assignments of a mullet or interlaced annulets to Robert (VII) of Elden. On the other hand, there appears to be a distinct pattern in the adoption of differences. The three grandsons of Robert FitzMaldred and Isabel Neville of Raby all used the saltire with major differences. Robert (I, d.1282), the eldest son of Geoffrey (III, fl.1242), had it in the Raby tinctures of gules and argent, while gules and ermine and the inverted argent and gules are present in the branches sired by his brothers Solomon of Holt and Geoffrey (IV) of Hornby. The only other major type of difference adopted was gules and or by John (II), a younger son of Robert (I), who probably died 1295/1300. Apart from the ubiquitous label, there is only one recorded use of a medium brisure; the indenting (/f) adopted by Ralph (I) al. Robert, the younger brother of Randolph (d.1331, baron 1295). All post-1300 generations kept to minor brisures, two of which appear to have become permanent fixtures in the branches of Condale/Cundall (c4) and the short-lived Salisbury-Warwick (b3).

One source with a nearly complete set of arms for the twenty-three children of Ralph Neville E.Westmoreland (d.1425) is practically useless for any study of the Neville's use of arms. This is the Neville Psalter, a book of hours prepared for his widow Joan Beaufort (d.1440), a legitimized daughter of John of Gaunt D.Lancaster.⁵⁹ Only two of the nine sons have brisures on their arms, the rest are undifferenced. The first is the eldest son John (VIII, o.v.p.1423) with a label argent and this is the only armorial reference to him. Several eldest sons have used the label azure (b1) and there is also a reference to a label or (b2). The other is a label gobony (or compony, b3) argent-azure for the third son Richard (I, d.1460), who was created E.Salisbury in 1429 - which may be why he was given special attention. The label gobony is mainly found as a quarter in the arms of Richard (I) E.Salisbury and his son Richard (II, d.1471) E.Warwick - also remembered as the Kingmaker of War of the Roses fame. The undifferenced arms of the daughters are impaled with those of their husbands. Four married dukes and most married barons or at least major magnates. As a curiosity, one may note that countess Joan managed to disguise her daughter Elizabeth from her first marriage to Robert Ferrers of Bolton as a Neville. Elizabeth married a baron, John Lord Greystoke. One may note that the ecclesiastic members of the family also used brisures (b3, c6, c7).

7. Discussion

In his commentary on seven armorials from the reign of Edward III, Noël Denholm-Young devoted three pages to the Powell Roll and made three points.⁶⁰ The first two points were on the localization of the entries in the armorial and the connection to the Ufford family headed by the earl of Suffolk. Both elements will be discussed below - including his hypothesis that the armorial was collated, compiled and executed by a herald serving the earl.

The third point was the likeness of the Powell Roll to the general rolls of the reign of Edward I. Denholm-Young noted that some names were contemporary, while others were long dead, and some appeared to be duplicated. Rather unkindly, he suggested that the Powell-compiler had "come across a fresh source and in his agglomerative fashion had simply tacked it on to his existing stock-in-trade", and concluded that "Such a list would be of little practical use to a herald or genealogist unless he learned it by heart". His conclusion in fact encompasses all general, universal and composite armorials and doom all as useless. It is probably a little overdramatic and influenced by modern ways. Medieval genealogists hardly worked from armorials, nor from archival studies - but rather from verbal or written traditions in a eulogic way. For heralds, or an interested amateur, the medieval memory was probably better focused than today, and whether written or painted, armorials are not that difficult to search.

Composite arms are not covered, neither are the arms of the junior branches.

7.1 Herald as compilers

The hypothesis that heralds were the makers of armorials is central to the writings of Denholm-Young and Anthony Wagner, and is still prevalent among anglophile commentators. No hard evidence has been presented either for the generality of the opinion nor for its application to specific armorials (at least before c.1500 and the works of Wriothesley studio or workshop). There are probably two main explanations for holding this opinion. One is the well-established position of English (and Scottish) heralds as guardians of the use of armory and as collectors, copyists and makers of armorials; the other is a general disinterest among the British in continental armorials and in continental writings on armory. Even a cursory excursion into German armorials would have shown two armorials made by or for non-heralds: the Richental (KCR) on participants at the Church Council in Constance 1414-18, and the related Grünenberg (GRU).

The opposite view, that heralds had nothing (or at least very little) to do with making armorials and related writings, has been most forcefully expounded by Torsten Hiltmann in a series of papers.⁶¹ The present writer prefers a middle course. Most armorials are anonymous and without any direct indication of the occupation of the compiler, scribe and/or painter, but there are a few continental armorials that have been determined to be in the autograph of heralds, notably the Gelre (GEL) and the Rugen (RUG). A better argument, but still not hard evidence, is the putative course of preservation or propagation of several fragments of older armorials over many generations before they were incorporated into a more recent one, e.g. the Normans listed in the Wijnberghen (WIN:319-494) around 1285 before going into several of the members of the TOISON D'OR group of armorials during 1435-60.⁶²

Other commentators, incl. Wagner and Denholm-Young, have noted the inclusion of older material in both general and composite armorials on both sides of the Channel.⁶³ Many non-contemporary inserts in armorials are singular or as short fragments, e.g. fo.25v (PO:589-600) in the present armorial, while others make up fairly large segments. Non-contemporaries dominate many late medieval armorials.⁶⁴ Some names may have been thought relevant to include as representatives of great houses or idols of chivalry, others may have come from armorials (or fragments) owned or borrowed by the compiler. The ordinaries were obviously reworked from older armorials.⁶⁵

Who would own and possibly lend armorials during 1300-1450? Probably anyone interested in armory. We know that the monk Matthew Paris was interested enough in armory to put arms, even in tabular form, into his chronicles. Also, from the Scrope-Grosvenor case, it is evident that several knights noted, recorded and remembered arms of people met during travel, tournaments and war. The argument of the present writer is that when multiple and large segments of older material is encountered it is more likely that these have been preserved or recopied over generations by people cooperating day-by-day and able to pass manuscripts to successors. 14th century bibliophiles, not to mention amoriophiles, must have been rarer than heralds serving, at least for a time, a common master. For the odd inserts, anybody would be able to do this.

Noël Denholm-Young has been ridiculed for claiming personal heralds of magnates as compilers of named armorials on the basis of the names in leading entries and in the present case on the superior number of entries from a given family. The critics are right in noting that the arguments are weak and does not prove much, but they are not without merit. Unusual precedence may indicate a special relationship between compiler and magnate without implying that the magnate had commissioned the armorial in question, and the employment of personal heralds by magnates has been documented. In itself, the presence of seven Uffords can hardly be decisive, but the presence of under-age sons is suggestive. This will be considered below and related to the distribution of multiple family items, territorial affiliation and structure of the armorial.

7.2 Territorial affiliation

The mid 14th century territorial possessions of a magnate may with some difficulty and extensive research into ancient charters and calendared governmental documents be reconstructed and their caput (principal seat) determined, but it would be nearly impossible to do it for the many hundred families and persons mentioned in this armorial and range far beyond any reasonable scope for an edition of coats of arms. What has been done is what Denholm-Young attempted, but did not report in detail, that is attach counties to each entry. He found a strong East Anglian bias in the armorial, which would correspond with his proposal that it was made for Robert Ufford E.Suffolk. In the absence of details there are two questions: what did he mean by East Anglia; and how did he attach counties to names (items)? We may disregard his comment that there are two parts of the armorial (apart from the obvious banner-shield division), of which the second part is the earlier - as the reader may comfort him- or herself browsing the commented transcription.⁶⁶

East Anglia has over time covered varying counties and subdivisions. In the present NUTS2 statistical survey it covers the three counties Norfolk, Suffolk and Cambridgeshire, but one may add Essex to get the 'Eastern Counties' to the north of the Thames and south of the Wash, which has been done here to enhance any bias.⁶⁷

The county attached to a name ought to be the one where a magnate had his caput or where a lesser manorial lord lived, but even that can be difficult to assess as properties changed with deaths, inheritances, forfeitures, grants and marriages. The approach used here is admittedly inconsistent, but has been chosen to avoid interminable visits to archives for unprinted documents and extensive searches among the printed calendars, not to mention the repeated disappointments of not being able to place a manor on the map. If possible, the county chosen was the one where the family first settled or came into prominence, unless there are reasonable indications that the person identified stayed mostly in another county. The more important manors are mentioned in the comments. Besides the 126 entries named with one of the 'Eastern counties', there are many people (close to 50) with substantial holdings in East Anglia; and about a dozen that probably did hold there. One may want to detract the peers living in East Anglia, as they would probably have been entered anyway. If you prefer not to, just add one percent to the tally - there were seven in Norfolk and two in Suffolk. The present calculation is based on there being 45 peers (i.e. with banners), 4 royals and 12 extinct families, leaving 610 entries to be compared.

The men entered into the armorial must all have belonged to the knightly class. Not only are four fifths of the names prefixed with 'sir', 'sire or 'seigneur', but many are identified as knights in official documents and more as filling the offices as commissioners, knights of the shire (MP's), and on juries - reserved for knights and their public duty. This lessens the problem of assessing any possible bias a little - but not much. We do not need to compare the relative populations of the counties as such, but 'only' the proportions of knights. However, no study of the distribution or even of the total number of knights in the mid 14th century was identified. A study on the number of knights, in which most of the data came from assize lists a hundred years earlier, was combined with an assessment of income in 1436, to get an estimate of the size of the knightly class.⁶⁸ The former yielded c. 2000 knights around 1250, the latter c.1000 some 200 years later. The c.1100 items in the Parliamentary Roll (N/PAR) is usually considered to record most of the strenuous (fighting) knights, with some weakness among the northern counties, giving about 1250 knights in 1308/12. As a rough estimate, there may have been about the same number in mid 14th century, which suggests that the Powell Roll has half of the knightly class in it.

As noted above there are 126 entries from the Eastern Counties al. East Anglia which gives 21% of the total. With the secondary landholders the proportion increases to 30% for the 4-5 counties. One might expand the calculation to a county-by-county assessment, but that would exceed the scope of this edition and require a more critical assessment of the territorial attachment in order to be reliable. A rough regional estimate must suffice. The seven counties in the North account for 19%.⁶⁹ Five counties in West Midlands account for 14%, four in East Midlands for 14%, South Midlands for 5%, and Wessex (South West) for another 13%.⁷⁰ The South East has a meagre 4% of the entries.⁷¹

The 1436 survey by H.L. Gray gives the proportion of taxable people by income level, but not by region or county, so this is of little use. Both magnates and the more wealthy knights typically owned land in several counties, and in many instances were called upon to perform their knightly duties as shire knights and commissioners in more than one county. So we are left with the assize lists examined by J. Quick. He found that the density of knights varied much during the reign of Henry III among the 27 counties studied. No data was available from 12 counties, incl. Cambridgeshire. The density was highest in the belt from East Anglia & Kent-Surrey to South Midlands & Leicestershire, typically 1 knight per 12,000 acres, down to 1 per 54/63,000 acres in Northumberland and Yorkshire. In the West it was more like 1 per 15,000 acres, and 1 per 20,000 in the South (Hants, Ssx, Devon). Accordingly, some overrepresentation must be expected from East Anglia, and it would be meaningless to compare the North with data from only two of seven counties.

When the distribution in the Powell Roll is compared to the assize rolls examined by J. Quick it is evident that East Anglia (21% in PO vs. 18%) is not overrepresented, but that the rest of Middle and Southern England is underrepresented, while the West is about equal and the North has almost the double.⁷² If one prefers the glass half filled rather than half empty, Denholm-Young is right. Relatively speaking, East Anglia is much better covered than the rest of England, especially if one assumes that the overrepresentation of the North (i.e. Yorkshire and Northumberland) could be caused by the compiler having been there in 1346 at the time of the battle of Durham or Neville's Cross.

What may be called the 'territorial structure' of the armorial also favours East Anglia. More than 100 of the first 150 non-peer entries are from this region, and they are followed (nos. 193/9r - 228/10r) by a series of barons. Combining those on the banner pages and the second set makes a near complete roster of the peers of 1347/48. Admittedly, there is a sprinkling of prominent non-barons and men, who was only summoned later. There are also a couple of 'minors' (nos. 203, 212), who may have been included later, and not in 1348 as such. The Northerners (nos. 224-240) on 10rv, which include Neville of Raby (#224) and Thomas Rokeby (#226), the sheriff of Yorkshire, who commanded in the victorious battle of Durham / Neville's Cross on October 17th 1346. The rest of the pages contain alternating individual entries and short county series of 3-13 items each.

7.3 The Ufford connection.

In the absence of any direct attribution, we must examine whatever criteria that can be used to establish a special relationship between the compiler and the earl of Suffolk. Denholm-Young stated his conclusion in clear terms. Suffolk was “.. just the man in fact to need a herald and want a roll of arms”, and the armorial “.. was probably made in a hurry, by a skilled herald”.⁷³ He adds that the painted armorial was probably preceded by a draft, and infers that other armorials may have been consulted. One may agree to all four suggestions, but neither qualifies as evidence for a connection. In fact, his only arguments are that there are many East Anglian knights and that the Uffords are the largest family group in the armorial. The former is of interest, but largely irrelevant. It is not a roster of vassals and dependents, a muster list, nor a survey of regional nobility and gentry. The latter can be suggestive, but is not by itself evidence. There are as noted above as many Beauchamp arms as there are of Ufford.

Two criteria may be considered: (1) an unusual precedence or placing of family members; (2) peculiar forms of presentation or selection. Considering the first criteria, the Uffords were of recent prominence and the earl was hardly the dominant landholder in East Anglia. His first preferment came only in 1332 as a reward for his involvement in the anti-Mortimer coup. The second in 1337 must have been a combination of ability and royal friendship, as was the preferment of William Bohun (#8) as E.Northampton. Most of his properties were recent grants from the king in support of his dignity, so the family would not have had time to build a vast and close affinity. His son and successor William (#172) would expand his possessions through his marriage to Joan, a granddaughter and junior coheir of Thomas ‘of Brotherton’ E.Norfolk, a Plantagenet. The precedence of the earl as #11, fifth among the eleven non-royal earls, is not particularly high. The placing of his cousins John (II, #49) and Edmund (II, #51) and that of his younger brother Edmund (I, #134) could also be expected considering their neighbouring entries and the family connection.

The interesting part is the inclusion and placing of three of his sons. In the comments to the entries they are identified as minors at the time of compilation (1348). Minors ought not to be included in an armorial of knights. Such an anomaly could be evidence of a special relationship. His eldest son Robert (IV) is missing, and may have died before 1352, possibly between 1345 and 1348. The second son has the label, which in the present line-up would indicate the eldest son alive. The three sons (#169, 171, 172) are placed at the top of a recto page (8r1, 3, 4), which imply that they may have been added later, if the present manuscript is an emended copy, not the original compilation.

Before accepting the inclusion of under-age sons as evidence for a special relation between earl and compiler, it is prudent to check whether there are similar entries from other families. There are! Ralph Neville (#224), a northern baron, also has three sons included. They exhibit a similar pattern (nos. 232, 234, 236) as the Uffords, and are the eldest, third and fourth sons of Ralph. The second son was Alexander (II), later archbishop of York, which may be why he was excluded from the armorial. Ralph Neville was almost at level with Henry Percy, the top magnate on the Scottish Marches, and like him a commander at Durham / Neville’s Cross in 1346.⁷⁴ He was also at times a senior member of the king’s household and council. Irrespective of this, he only enters the list in the middle of fo.10r at the head of some northern knights and after the entire second instalment of barons. One may suggest that ff.9r-10v are a later amendment intended to supplement the list of barons and add some of the men active in the defence of the northern borders, including Thomas Rokeby, the victor of Neville’s Cross.⁷⁵

The Beauchamps of Warwick can be added to the above two families. #469 Guy (II) and #471 Thomas (III, 4E), sons of Thomas (II) E.Warwick, were also minors in 1348, as was their cousin John (V, #394) son of Giles Beauchamp of Powick (#387). If these putative amendments were made some 10-15 years later, all of the sons would be well on in their careers.

8. Summary and conclusion

It is difficult to present a simple and straight evaluation of the Powell Roll as there are a number of contrary findings in the preceding chapters. Most of these suggest that the contents of the principal copy (PO/a, Ashmole 804/iv) is not the original compilation of 1348, but a slightly later amended copy. The two other copies (PO/b, PO/c) corroborate the transcription of names and arms, but do not add further knowledge to what can be gained from the principal copy.

The reader, not only the editor, has to make up his or her mind on four points concerning this armorial: its originality / possible sources, authorship, territoriality, and curiosities, e.g. substitution of names, inclusion of minors, confounded arms, and omissions. There is no obvious reason why any Neville minors should have been included, except for a visit to the North. For the Ufford and Beauchamp minors, there might be a reason. Thomas (II, #169) Ufford married Elizabeth Beauchamp, a daughter of Thomas E. Warwick (#10). It is not known when the contract was made, but they were married by 1353.⁷⁶ As confidants of the king, the two earls worked together over the years, and a close associate of the E. Suffolk, not necessarily a herald, would have little trouble in noting the names and brisures (if they had their own arms at the time) of the older children in both families.

This leads of course to the claim of Noël Denholm-Young that the armorial was made by a personal herald of Robert Ufford E. Suffolk. The compiler-painter is anonymous, and there is absolutely no evidence of his profession. He used good materials, the usual vellum of the times, and began by using expensive gold and silver for his arms. After a short while (a quarter of the folios) he changed to cheaper materials. The artwork is good and clear without being excellent. The shields have the typical elongated form of early heraldry. The eagles and the slightly skinny lions are romanesque in style, but overall the artwork compares well with the clarity and forms used by medieval heraldic painters. This suggests at least some training and experience in painting arms, which was hardly the peak competence of mid 14th century heralds.⁷⁷ But once the selection of people and arms were made, anybody could get it painted either from blazoned notes or from a list of names and a template of arms, e.g. one or more older and comprehensive armorials.

There is little doubt that the compiler had a fair knowledge of East Anglian landholders and that he began his compilation with these. After finishing this first batch, he apparently added names (and arms) from small regional groups as he found or remembered them. The odd individual from another region were often placed in between.

The compiler does not appear to have been close to the royal court, parliament or administration. He managed to get all the earls, but only half of the baronage into the leading segment of his compilation. He or a continuator inserted a second batch of barons on folios 9-10 (nos. 193-229). Neither of these included Bartholomew Burghersh sr. (d. 1355) a baron who served as chamberlain 1347-55, nor his son Bartholomew jr. (o.s.p. 1369), who was a founder knight of the Garter. Both were prominent in court life. This omission may imply that the amendments were made after that year and the extinction of the Burghersh line.

It seems on a first examination that the compiler had a good knowledge of the knightage of the realm, but inspected more closely, most of these could have been obtained from muster lists or from a contemporary armorial and mixed with other sources. There are a few older inserts, e.g. #417 Piers Grandison or Granson, and repeats (#463 E. Warwick doubled) that do not fit in even with a hypothesis of a continuation. He does have some unusual items, e.g. #458 John Potenhale, probably a commoner and purveyor to the court and the army, and also some little known gentlemen.

Not much can be concluded from the way the alternating county or regional subsets succeed each other or how an individual is inserted, but there are 18 family pairs of an A-B-A structure, which suggests that they came from a template, if not a source, with a two-column structure. Some have actually the sequence A-B-A-A, which would indicate a page shift.⁷⁸ The spelling is occasionally abominable, but that is hardly surprising as most names were heard, not spelled - and much better than in some armorials. The present editor has suggested a few substitutions of christian names, but fumbling on a christian name was hardly uncommon for medieval scribes. There are a few mistaken blazons, notably the probable inversions of field and figure in #190 and #250. This type of mistakes suggests that the painted arms were made from confounded written notes.⁷⁹

⁷⁷ The connection between heralds, amateur armorists, painters and the painting of arms need further research.

The different scribal hands involved in the legends and those without any legend may mean nothing more than that the compiler had helpers and that in the present case, arms were painted before the legends were written. For the PO/b copy it was obviously the other way around. However, the break from expensive materials and the later change away from hand A, could mean that PO/a was meant for a different person (customer or commissioner) than the person, who got it in the end. The drawing and painting appears to have been executed by one person.

Who was the compiler, and did he have a continuator? There is no hard evidence, so the answer is partly a matter of taste and opinion. He (or both) probably came from or at least lived for some time in East Anglia and may have been in the affinity of Robert Ufford E.Suffolk. It is also likely that he was acquainted with royal and local officials and had travelled, probably with the army, but not necessarily as a soldier - and he was interested in armory. As Noël Denholm-Young proposed, he may have been a herald, who may have been able to buy or borrow the sources needed, and could easily have passed his unfinished manuscript and draft on to a colleague or any lord he served. The alternative preferred here is that the 'original' manuscript was acquired / borrowed a decade or so later by a person with knowledge both of armory and of central as well as local administration, and who probably had taken part in the defence of the North. He is proposed to have commissioned a copy and requested the folio 9-10 insert and some minor changes without making a thorough revision of it. He is more likely to have been a gentleman (knight) of ample means, who had served as assistant to a sheriff and/or been a shire knight, than to have been a herald - and will probably remain anonymous.

At least one crucial question has been left unanswered: why did people make armorials, which includes why did people collect them. For the ordinaries, which were invented in England around 1340, the answer could be that they were handy reference tools, but this does not explain why the often unorganized tables of arms were made during the preceding one hundred years. Armorials are not found in the inventories of medieval libraries, but there is evidence that royalty did own copies, e.g. the Thomas Jenyns (TJ) in Queen Margaret's version, and John Goodall discovered a payment notice to 'Johan Albon peyntur le roi' for a copy of the Parliament Roll (N/PAR) made for Edward II in 1325/26.⁸⁰ Few have survived, even among the 49 manuscripts with N/PAR there is only one from the 14th and three from the 15th century.

Edward III, 1312-77, king of England 1327 in regency by his mother Isabelle of France and her lover Roger Mortimer E.March, personal rule 1330 after escaping virtual imprisonment with the help of his personal courtiers. Mortimer was executed and Isabelle imprisoned. He married Philippa of Hainaut (1314-69) in 1329 and they had 5 surviving sons.

He performed homage in 1329 to the king of France for Ponthieu and Guienne, but rescinded it by 1337. His first years was spent fighting the Scots until the battle of Halidon Hill in 1333. From 1338 there began the period of intermittent warfare with France known as the Hundred Years War. The major episodes of his reign was the naval battle of Sluys / l'Ecluse, Crécy 1346, siege of Calais 1347 and Poitiers 1356, leading to the peace treaty of Brétigny in 1360. The acquisitions were mostly lost by 1380.

The present arms was adopted in 1340, while preparing a campaign from the Low Countries into France.

Three of his sons, born before 1340, are mentioned here (#2-4), the fourth, Edmund of Langley, was born 1342, and the fifth, Thomas of Woodstock in 1355.

Hugh Despencer, c.1308-1349, o.s.p., son of Hugh jr (d.1326), summoned as a baron 1338. He married Elizabeth Montagu, daughter of William E.Salisbury and widow of Giles Badlesmere (#540). During the Breton campaign of 1342-43 he led a retinue of 2 bannerets, 13 knights and 58 esquires, one of the 10 largest companies. He fought at Sluys 1340, in Bretagne 1342 and later at Crécy with a larger contingent 2 bannerets, 40 knights, 86 esquires and 105 archers (GEC 4:273). He served as one of the ambassadors to Rome in 1343.

The Despenchers were a controversial family. Hugh sr (1260/61-1326) was summoned as a baron in 1295, became a mentor and favourite of Edward II, who created him E.Winchester in 1322. His son with Isabel Beauchamp, daughter of William E.Warwick, Hugh jr (c.1288-1326) was summoned independently as a baron in 1314. Hugh jr married Eleanor Clare, daughter of Gilbert E.Gloucester. Both Hugh sr and Hugh jr forfeited and were executed at the virtual deposition of Edward II by his queen Isabel of France and her Mortimer lover. Hugh (d.1349) supported his father in 1326, was imprisoned, but had the estates restored by 1332 and regained the peerage. He was succeeded by a nephew Edward (2B, 1336-75), son of his brother Edward (d.1342) and Anne Ferrers of Groby. His son Thomas (1373-1400, 3B) was a favourite of Richard II, created E.Gloucester, and executed on the deposition of the king.

 The canton is for Nerford of Norfolk. The present arms are sculpted outside on Yaxham Church (Norfolk) not far from Narborough and the Nerford estates, of which Skeyton stayed in this branch, also known as Warrenne of Poynton (Ches)..
 The principal line of Warrenne E.Surrey al. E.Warrenne became extinct with John (o.s.p.m.1347). John E.Surrey married Joan of Bar (d.1361) in 1309, but later tried (unsuccessfully) to have this marriage annulled, in part for having engaged Maud Nerford before his marriage. Thomas got livery of his lands in 1343, served in the Crécy-Calais campaign in the large company (3 bnts) of Thomas Hatfield Bp.Durham. He attended a Great Council in 1358, but was only summoned as a baron in 1364.

William's daughter and heir, Joan (d.1397), married Thomas Neville of Halumshire (d.1406), of the Nevilles of Raby, who was summoned as B.Furnival 1383.

The Furnivals from Yorkshire had {Ar bend Gu acc. 6 martlets Gu} in i.a. AN:82, AS:72, CKO:186, GEL:616, and N:100.

The present item appears to be either damaged by water or has been cancelled by red dyre. It appears as something like a cloudy {Gu cross patonce Or} as for William Latimer of Corby (c.1300-1381, 4B).

X GO AB paly & bend ch. 3 eagles

Peter Granson, o.s.p.1358, baron, son of William (d.1335, baron 1299) and Sibyl Tregoz (d.1334). His heir was his brother John Bp.Exeter (1291-1369). Peter / Piers held Dymmok & Oxenhale (Glos) & Eton & Ashperton & Stretton (Heref) & Burnham & Breene (Som) & Chipping Lambourn (Berks). He did not attend APrlament after 1349.

See #419 Otto (o.s.p.1328), 527 Peter (d.1359).

The Granson or Grandison were savoyard nobles, one of which Peter (d.1257/59) arrived in the reign of Henry III. This Peter had several sons and daughters, most of which returned to France, except two: Otto (o.s.p.1328, baron) and William (d.1335, baron 1299). Besides the basic arms {paly Ar-Az} and the primary difference {paly Ar-Az & bend Gu}, the savoyard branches used escallops or lions on the bend, while the later english ones used escallops, eagles or buckles.

There is an overlap in the use of escallops, so that the eldest son Otto continued with escallops (#419), while the younger William adopted eagles, as noted on seals and in armorials) and this was continued by his eldest son Peter (present here in #417), while the youngest Otto (d.1359) adopted buckles. The sole legitimate survivor, Thomas (1339-75), son of Otto, reverted to eagles after the death of his uncle Peter. The arms used by the middle brother John Bp.Exeter has not been found, though they are said to be on the misericords in his collegiate church of Ottery St.Mary (Devon).

There are references to later Gransons in England, e.g. Otto, king's knight for life 1392 (Walker S 12, 270); and William fl.1415 in armorials (Clemmensen OM). These were probably descended from a natural son of Peter and half-brothers of Thomas.

 Richard Waldegrave, no details.
 The pedigree of the E.Waldegrave is uncertain with several Richards, incl. Richard (c.1338-1402), an MP Suf 1376-90, king's knight for life 1377, who married either the heiress Joan Silvester of Bures (Suf) or Joan Sutton. He is said to be son of Richard (d.c.1339) and Agnes Daubeny). If Richard (I, fl.1280-95), who held in Nhants, probably Walgrave & Pitsford & in Towcester, is included a probable pedigree would run Richard (II, d.c.1339), present Richard (III), husband of Joan Silvester, and Richard (IV, c.1338-1402), husband of Joan Sutton and heir to Bures &c (Suf) - and the difference of a bend omitted by Richard (IV).
 An alternative would be a cousin of the senior line.

Arms of the earldom of Ulster, usually associated with the Burgh E.Ulster from 1263-1333. However, the arms of de Burgh were {lozengy Vr-Gu}.

The earldom passed through the heiress Elizabeth de Burgh, who in 1342 married Lionel D.Clarence (s/ Edw. III, d.1368, #3) and their daughter and heir Philippa who in 1368 married Edmund Mortimer (1352-1381) 3E.March & 1E.Ulster (see #26). The Mortimer E.March & Ulster used Mortimer qtg Ulster, e.g. in ARS:11, ETO:708.

 Arms of Simon Montfort E.Leicester (o.s.p.1265), called the 'veyl escu de leycestre' rather than arms of Atwood or atte Wode.
 The Montfort family came from Montfort-l'Amaury (can M-l'A, dep Yvelines / Essonne) and were prominent on both sides of the Channel. Two arms are attributed to the family and placed together on a stained glass window in the cathedral of Chartres from c.1220. The present lions arms are the family arms, known from 1195, while the {Pily-paly Ar-Gu} in e.g. E:19, FW:50, and TJ:1262 is less well understood.

A G saltire
 John Neville of the Nevilles of Hornby (Lancs), no details.
 There were several Johns at the time, several of which served in the wars, mostly also lancastrian retainers. The senior Hornby branch became extinct with John (o.s.p.1335), son of John (c.1270-1309). The elder John had 4 brothers: Geoffrey, Edmund, William and Robert sr. Robert (c.1312-73), son of Robert sr, was at Gt.Council 1342 and served at Crécy. The present John was probably a cousin or a misreading for Robert jr.

O S bend

Either Peter (IV) Mauley al. Malo Lacu, c.1281-1348), baron, son of Peter (III, d.1308, baron 1295), or his son Peter (V, c.1300-1355). Peter (IV) retired from active life 1332/40 and transferred most of his lands to his son. Peter (V) was in the Scottish in 1322 and attended the Gt.Council of 1324 in his own right. He fought at Neville's Cross in 1346, and in 1354 was one of the barons, who agreed to refer the French treaty to the pope.

See #457 for their cousin Robert Mauley.

Appendix D Coats of arms used by Ufford and its cadets

The Ufford family with seats and the majority of their properties in in Suffolk was a cadet branch of Peyton of Peytonhall (Suffolk), who used identical arms and modes of difference. There were two branches of Ufford (Suffolk and Wrentham) documented between c.1255-c.1390, and possibly a further undocumented branch.

‘-’ any of that name, probably the incumbent of the title at the time. ‘+’ a late extract.

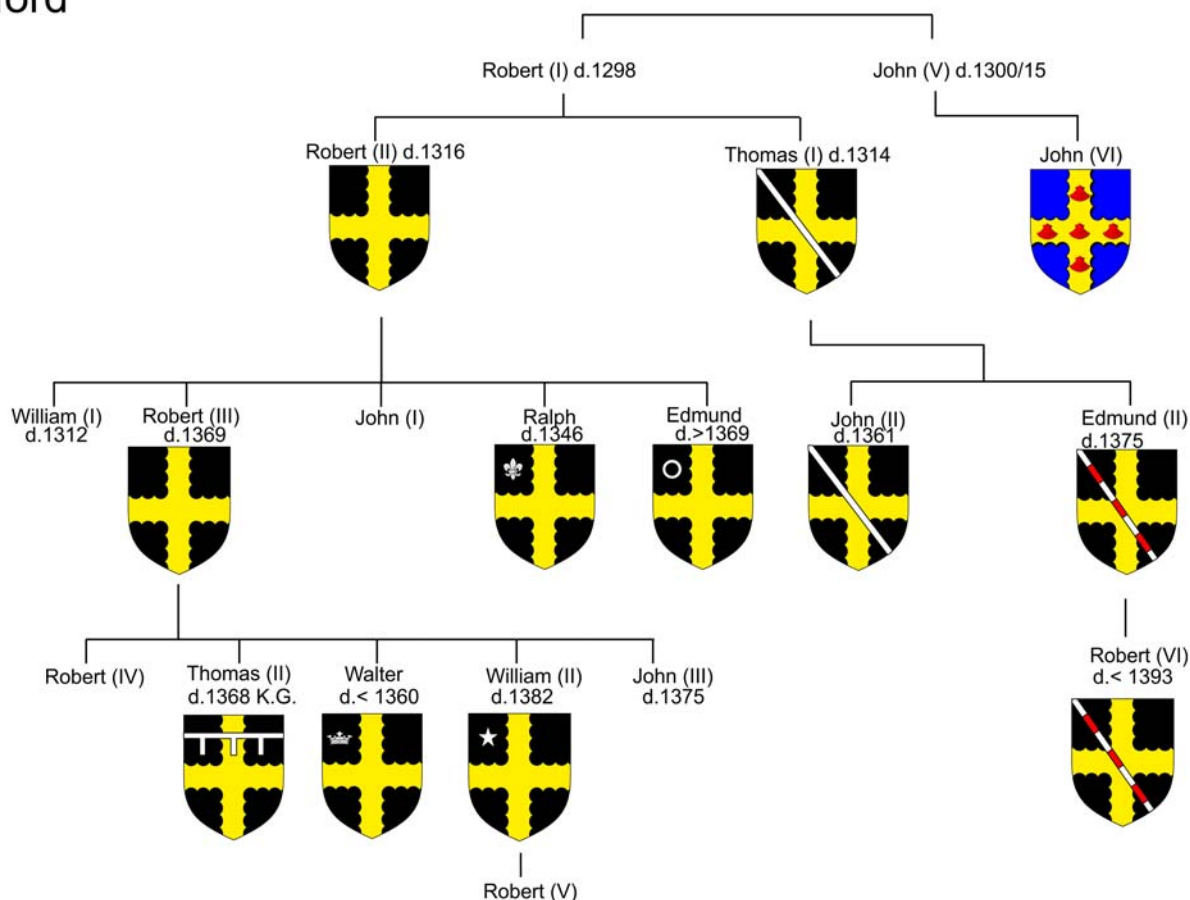

The pedigrees are derived from GEC 12A, pp.429-434; 12B, pp.148-156; and Waters CC 322-340, with a few supplements from calendared government papers, incl. quotes in Moor KE 5:69-72, and Brault RAE 2:428.

John (IV) and John (V) noted as of Shreveley (Nhants) and in Warws and Worcs are proposals, see e1.

Whaddon may be younger / illegitimate brother, hardly a vassal, see d7.

Appendix F Stapelton pedigree

The Stapelton pedigree is mainly based on GEC 12A:259 and notes in CIPM.

Appendix G Distribution of knights in the Powell and 13C assize rolls

J. Quick: Number of Knights in Thirteenth Century. In: P.R. Coss & al. (Eds): Thirteenth Century England. (A series of conference proceedings). [Quick NK] - London 1986, 1:114-123.

A survey of 1459 knights in 13C assize rolls from 27 counties, no data from 12 counties.

Variable density of knights among the counties, highest in East Anglia, Kent and South Midlands, lowest in North and South.

Powell Roll: 610 knights, i.e. excluding peers, royals and extinct titles.
