The Bergshammar (BHM) armorial

The Bergshammar armorial was edited and privately published by Jan Raneke in 1975 as his doctoral thesis at the University of Lund (Sweden). The book has 162 pages of discussion (in Swedish), a summary in French, a bibliography, and blazons in French of all arms and crests, and an index of names. Most of the entries (items) are identified by family or personal name. For reasons of space, references were restricted to a single mention of an armorial or a collection of seals, in which the arms are recorded.

The present e-book is intended as a supplement to the Raneke edition, and a substitute for those who cannot get or read the original edition. I have not attempted to retell his discussion or conclusions, nor is it a new edition of the manuscript, but the structure presented below incorporates much of the essence of his work. Several armorials and papers of medieval armory have been published during those forty years, and the new knowledge has led to the re-evaluation of some of the identifications and to (relatively minor) changes in the description of its structure and sources. Jan Raneke demonstrated that more than half of the armorial could have been derived from just two armorials (Gelre and Toison d'or) and a little of a third (Gymnich recte Lyncenich). The present status is that the sources of more than 85% of the Bergshammar are identified. For different reasons, as discussed in my book Editing Armorials, I agree that the armorial was compiled by a herald, but disagree with his idea that the compiler added to it over many years. My proposal is that it was a desk-work, painted during a relatively short period, and that the contents were copied from sources made available to the compiler. It must be pure luck that four of the few medieval armorials surviving in their original state were once in the same room. Today they can be seen in Stockholm, Bruxelles and Paris. Each kept as treasures by the holding institutions.

The four parts published here are: (1) a survey of its structure, the proposed sources, and the dates of collation of the segments (where known). (2) All coats-of-arms are blazoned in English with a name-code identification. The descriptions of the crested helmets have been omitted. If needed further details of the identification and references are available through the name-codes in my Ordinary of medieval armorials. (3) A two-part ordinary of the arms giving the item number and name-code. (4) A list of the name-codes and items numbers.
