When I first met Emmanuel de Boos some twenty years ago, we struck an instant friendship, which immediately developed into fruitful cooperation in exploring medieval armorials. The mutual exchanges of information, views and materials were abruptly brought to an end with his demise on June 22nd 2016 after a short violent illness.

What brought a Frenchman from Nantes and a Dane from Copenhagen together was the information by a mutual friend that we were both working on the Lyncenich armorial. For myself this work began with a primitive curiosity for handling old manuscripts and verifying information supplied by the few editors who had by then worked on armorials. I also had an emerging view that some armorials were closely related, especially to the Toison d’or, held by the Bibliothèque de l’Arsenal in Paris. For Emmanuel, it began in his undergraduate days, when he took the train from Paris to Bruxelles, so that he could transcribe the many armorials held by the Bibliothèque Royale Albert 1er. Though one worked in French and the other in English, we decided that cooperation was the way ahead, and that the eventual publication ought to be in French. We soon exchanged transcriptions and b/w prints of the safety microfilm, so as to have a common base for the exchanges of identifications and observations, which continued for many years as other work and projects had to take precedence for both of us. Neither of us lost sight of the goal, but it was never to happen.

Though the present edition is based on our exchanges, they have been filtered as taken from my notes and proposals, so the responsibility for any misinterpretations, omissions and faults are solely mine, while its positive qualities should be attributed to Emmanuel, a friend fondly remembered.

I also thank Klaas Padberg Evenboer, Jean-Marie van den Eeckhout, and Vladimir Ruzek for their help with identifications.
1. Introduction

Though the present medieval manuscript is original in the sense that is unlikely to be a copy of another armorial, it is not a unique compilation of coats of arms supplemented by miniatures. It is a member of a group of armorials closely connected to the court of Philippe 'le bon' or ‘the good’, duke of Burgundy.\(^1\) This group, named after its most glorious member, the Toison d’or,\(^2\) shares a number of segments, of which one was at least 150 years old at the time of its incorporation in the group.

At present the Toison d’or group has four or five near-contemporary members, two later members made in Lorraine, and one later member made in Lille, presently in Northern France, but at the time in the Spanish Netherlands.\(^3\) It also has a number of satellites.\(^4\) Each member of the group has a blend of common core segments, usually of arms from a single region, and other segments and elements such as pedigree displays, miniatures and texts unique to one or two members.

The compiler is unknown, so the manuscript is named after one of its owners. The social and professional status of the compiler cannot be ascertained from the internal evidence, but as argued in chapter 9, it is likely that the collection of the core segments was the result of cooperation between some of the heralds employed by the duke.

The emphasis in this edition has been on the identification of the families, if possible of individual members, and their main seats. There is still much to be done to identify sources and clarify why entries were selected, and what was the purpose of this unfinished compilation.

\(^1\) While most of the names of places and persons conform to English usage, certain names are preserved in their local language, and as much of the armorial concerns linguistic borderlands, the reader will find the local languages (French, Flemish, German) used interchangeably with translations placed as needed – or as first met.

\(^2\) Most of the armorials referred to in this work have commonly used names (in italics), which is convenient not only when working with multi-copy manuscripts, but also for any general discussion. The actual institutional references can be found in the bibliography or in Clemmensen OM. As the data used came from the database behind the latter work, standardized sigla (3-letter codes, except for English armorials, which follow CEMRA) are used for all items in an armorial. Thus Bruxelles, KBR, ms. II.6567 is Lyncenich or LYN, a member of the Toison d’or group of armorials.

\(^3\) The principal or near contemporary group members are the Toison d’or (ETO, c.1435), Paix d’Arras (APA, 1435), Bergshammar (BHM, c.1455), Heessel Compendium (CHE, c.1434/57, no English), and Lyncenich. The source of the unnamed ARS was probably of that period, though the BnF fr.5256 was copied c.1650. This has an independent lineage from the original collation. In addition, there appears to be a further manuscript by the ETO artisan in private possession (COL, paper, 290 x 210 mm, austrians, bohemians, poles).

\(^4\) The line between a later member and a satellite is fluid and largely determined by the relative proportion of items from this group and other armorial groups or sources. The lorrainians are Lutzelbourg (NLU, c.1540) and its copy Clemery (CLE, BnF, fr.23076) together with armorials properly referred tp as a group derived from the Rineck (RYN, c.1500) as discussed by Blanchard RYN; the LeBlancq (LBQ, c.1560) was made in Lille and contains material from several groups; the usefulness of Sicile (SIC, c.1640) and Charolais (CHA, c.1660) is questionable. The relationships are discussed in the forthcoming Clemmensen EA.
2. The manuscript

The present manuscript, Bruxelles, Bibliothèque Royale Albert 1er (KBR), Fonds General II.6567, made in mid 15th century, was formerly known as the Gymnich armorial due to a misreading of an owner’s marking by Paul Adam-Even. As such it was named by Jan Raneke in his edition of the Bergshammar, another member of the group. The correct name is Lyncenich after one of the first owners. What is known of its provenance is described in section 2.2.

The manuscript as presently bound is somewhat disordered and contains a mixture of tables of arms organised either by rank or by region and miniaturelike pedigree displays as surveyed in section 2.3 and in appendices 1 and 2.

It was described as No.18 in Christiane van den Bergen-Pantens: “l’Héraldique dans les manuscrits antérieurs à 1600”, Bruxelles 1985, p.32-33, with a mimeographed supplement on the watermarks by Martin Wittek, 14.04.2005. It is also noted in H.C. van Parys: “Inventaire”, Bruxelles 1971, p.290. A b/w microfilm was provided by the KBR. J-C-Loutch mentions a copy of the Lyncenich in the Archives of the Order vom Goldende Vlies in Vienna in the Haus-, Hof- und Staatsarchiv department of the National Archives of Austria (in Loutsch L). Its presence could not be confirmed by the inventory nor by the archivist in charge.5

2.1 Codicology

When examined in 2003-2004 the binding and leaves were in need of restoration. The book is thick and smallish, 205 x 140 mm (approx. A5, 4°), 197 sheets of paper, ff.1-175 of medieval origin, ff.176-197 from late 16th century. Several sheets are cut down to and into top row legends and external columns, probably on binding. A dozen flaps indicate pages cut out, or half-sheets sewn into a quire, e.g. the folio before 53rv (poles) was lost.

The legends and textual notes are in french or flemish/dutch in 3 hands. The principal hand A and a secondary, contemporary, but rougher hand B wrote most legends. A nearly illegible hand E, probably near contemporary, added the introductory notes (chapter headings) and a few legends. Two minor and later hands, C and D, added some legends. The present edition has 2836 numbered items,6 of which 2827 are arms relevant for evaluation. The arms are painted in colour, and most segments are preceded by a note in flemish giving the numbers of arms in a nearly illegible older hand. Some pages are left blank. There are 96 items with names only, 480 items without legends, and 880 items as repeats or close variations of arms listed in the armorial. Only 25 items have crested helmets, while 64 items are square banners or triangular pennons.

5 J-C. Loutsch may have confused it with AoTdO, ms.57, Armorial equestre de Gilles de Rebecque (ERQ).

It was not possible to examine the physical composition, incl. the structure of the quires, during our visits to the library, but from the structure of the book, these appear to have been shuffled. There are two sets of page indicators. There is an older pagination, 1-395 in the top corner, and a modern foliation at the bottom (used in the present edition, not present on the microfilm).

The introductory notes or chapter headers written in flemish in hand E are numbered, but at least a third are lost, and the rest nearly illegible. Between 7v and 55v are numbers one to six, and between 87r and 160r, one can find numbers 11, 10, 14, 15, 20, 22 and 24. In all 17 headers have survived. Twelve of these can be assigned to groups of segments as used in this edition with some certainty. Where numbers are legible in the headers, they fit more or less to the groups as proposed: '18 wetes 185 wapens’ on 44r for England compared to 187 items on 16 pages in segments 07, 31 and 32. But some are hardly recognizable, e.g. for the segments of kings, dukes and counts (25, 26, 28 on 22r-37v) the header on 21r says 138, while the tally is 183 items.

Besides the pedigree layout (1 + 4, type P) of presens and four ancestors, two layout types dominate the tables of arms. For the first 20 foliae there is a 4x4 (type E) layout, while from 45r on the 3x4 (type C) dominates. Type E recurs on ff. 139r-142v, and on 165r. Both layouts have the shields closed up in the row. The French segment 29, ff.38r-42v, employed a variation of 3x3 with spaces between the shields in a row. The kings, dukes and counts on ff.22r-37v employed different layouts for each rank. For the Utrecht Tournament (segment 78, 167v-170r), the participants were listed by party and banner or pennon, a layout that would indicate a tournament collation.

Eight watermarks centered on 1435-1455 were found in the medieval part, and one in the 30 leaves added later: 'lettre B majuscule’ of the paper maker Lebé of Troyes, who was active 1561-1583. The medieval ones comprise 2 types of anchors (1434-1442, c.1441), crosier (c.1440-1441), 2 types of clusters of grapes (1440-1456, 1441-1452), and 3 types of ox heads (1440-1450, 1444-1452, 1436-1450). No details on the leaves with watermarks were available.

8 Blank pages, chapter headings / introductory notes, and most ex libris are numbered in a 9000-series to fit with the database used in the preparation of this edition. For practical reasons a few pieces of this type were left in the number series used for the draft.
2.2 Ex libris and owner’s markings

The eldest indication of ownership is the ex libris-like painted arms of Jean Oels pasted onto fo.198r (p.395, no.2836). These arms were granted by Charles V in 1531.

The next is the written ’ex libris Jois de Luxemburg dit Lyncenich armorum reguli titulo comitis hannone 1629’ on fo.1v (p.2, s.n.) for Jean de Luxembourg Sire de Lyncenich, who was appointed Hainaut king-of-arms in 1621. Lyncenich, modern Linzenich, Gemeinde Boncheim near Kirchberg, 5 km south of Jülich in Nordrhein-Westphalen in the Federal Republic of Germany.

The third is the possession of the seigneurs de Grez and Warfusee, confirmed by the presence of their arms, Barry gules-or, crest, greyhound’s head collared between wings, and/or name on 1r (overpasted, but crest and name visible, ’september 1636’ noted on inside binding), a sketch on fo.176r (p.353, no.9353), full achievement with ’die heer van Grez ende Maleue’ on fo.170r (p.342), another full achievement with ’de Grez et Warfuzex sire de Maleue obijt 1351 gist a Grez’ on fo.176r (p.353).

The fourth ex libris pasted on fo.95v (p.192, no.1472) has the handwritten legend below: ’Charles Churchill general d’infanterie de sa mats Brittanique 1706 et commandant de la ville de Bruxelles’, for the brother of the Duke of Marlborough.

The last indication is the uncoloured ex libris arms of Louis Ferdinand Joseph de Claris marquis de la reine de Rhodos (1696-1773) and his wife Maria Anna von Hohenloe-Bartenstein (1701-1758) pasted across the de Grez arms on fo.1r. The arms are A: Qtly 1+4: Az 3 wings centered Ar; 2: Ar 2 bends Gu; 3: Party Ar-Sa 12 mullets in 3 pales cch; inescutcheon of Ar fess Az; B = Qtly 1+4: Ar 2 lions passant guardant Gu;2+3: lozengy Or-Sa on chief Sa lion passant Ar; above a crown with 5 leaves + 4 pearls, 2 lions as supporters..

A printed uncoloured engraving of the equestrian seal of Enguerrand de Coucy is pasted onto page 3 (fo.2r, no.2) like an ex libris.

The armorial was acquired by the KBR among the volumes in the Fonds Houwaerts.

2.3 Structure

The contents have been divided into 80 segments as listed in appendix 1. The early work on the armorial and the numeration of items used then did not distinguish between arms relevant for the evaluation of the medieval content, and elements like ex libris, which were better left out of the numeration. As that numeration has been cited extensively, our joint decision was to keep it and accept the minor problems it would give comparing sequences.
Besides the owner’s marks noted in section 2.2, three types of presentation of arms are present: conventional tables of arms (mostly without crests), lists of marriages, and pedigree displays. For this seven types of standardized layouts are used together with miniature-like images of varying complexities and artistic quality. For pedigree displays the more common order and numbering is in two rows and a centre piece: father (F, 2) and mother (M, 3) in top row, key person (P, 1) in centre, and paternal (FF, 3) and maternal grandfather (MF, 4) in bottom row. A traditional way of displaying ancestors in germanic-speaking countries. The type of layout is specified for each segment in appendix 1 together with an indication whether the segment is part of the core elements of the TOISON D’OR group, i.e. which armorials contain similar segments.

The quires, and probably also single leaves and/or sheets onto which the contents were entered, have been thoroughly shuffled around. Nearly a dozen segments were split into halves, e.g. England in segments 07 (21 items on 8rv, nos.108-128) and 32 (157 items on 44v-51v, nos.581-737). The complexity is increased as the preceding segment 31 at the top of fo.44v displays the arms of the four ancestors of Henry VI (r.1422-1471), while fo.8r (nos.108-116) apparently lists the sons and a half-brother of Henry IV (r.1399-1413), while both 8rv and 44r-51r is a version of the core segment England of the group, which was probably collated in 1397 during the reign of Richard II (r.1377-1399) by a burgundian herald, while living in the household of an English nobleman. The unnamed coat of arms on 51v (p.103, no.737), Quarterly of 9 ermines-ermine, appears to be a slightly later addition of the arms of William Bruges Garter king-of-arms 1415-1450.

The present order of segments, including what must in reality be half-segments, cannot be used for any evaluation of the intent of the compiler. It begins with some german segments, then an English half-segment, more germans, some Christian kings and princes, a couple of pedigrees, some poles, more germans, and so on. It was probably the intention of the compiler to have each regional segment preceded by a display of the pedigree of its prince. Until the KBR makes a thorough codicological examination available, any attempt to reconstruct the original order will be pure guesswork.

For this edition, segments will be grouped together and discussed in six chapters. For details of the items and layout used, see the entries and appendix 1. An overview and discussion of the possible intentions in the use of marietal and pedigree displays is given in chapter 4, followed by the segments with arms of people living in the dominions of the duke of Burgundy in chapter 5. This chapter also includes a discussion of whether some parts, e.g. segments 77-78, refer to identifiable tournaments. Chapter 6 continues the examination of segments with people from the allies and/or close neighbours along the Lower Rhine, incl. Guelders, Juliers, and Lorraine. As described above, the three English segments are further examined in chapter 7, while the two French segments (29, 68) are considered in chapter 8. At the time, the county of Artois was mostly in the hands of the duke of Burgundy, so most of segment 69 will be included in the chapter 5 evaluation. Nearly half of the segments will be covered in chapter 9. The major part of these relate to the many princedoms in the Holy Roman Empire, Germany for short, but with sections covering the western realms, German princes and counts, Poland, Milan, Lithuania and the Teutonic Order in Prussia. The section on the Habsburgian heartlands has Austria in 3 segments and one each for Tyrol and Bohemia.

3. Miniatures and ancestral displays

Miniatures, sketches and simple table showing four-ancestor pedigrees are characteristic features of this armorial. About half (11 sets) are simple tables with a central achievement of shield and crested helmet for the present person surrounded by four shields of arms for his/her pedigree: father, mother, father’s mother and mother’s mother – in that order.

There are four coloured miniatures with a figure of a lady, an angel, a swan or a lion, often in a garden-like setting, as the centre of the display. Five displays are more like sketches with a single person in armorial dress (a pair on 150r). All can be identified as notable princes or members of the Burgund-Valois family (Appendix 2).

Seven of the sets are present in the Bergshammar, one (LYN:109v/1575-1579, BHM:47v/440a-d) so like in execution, that it can only have been painted by the same artisan or by a direct copyist. The Bergshammar has an additional two displays, one of which (BHM: 85v/1165-1170) represents the marriage in 1454 of Isabelle de Bourbon and Charles, the heir to Burgundy.

In addition there is an uncoloured sketch of the king of the Romans (Deutsch König, DtKg) and five electors (Kurfürsten), each with the emblem of his honorary imperial office. The missing electors are Bohemia and Cologne. The page is cut on its right edge, but there does not appear to have been more than the six figures now present. The king of Bohemia would have been omitted as he would probably have been the one elected, but there is no obvious reason to omit the Abp. Cologne. Ruprecht von Pfalz was dismissed by the emperor in 1473 and forced to resign in 1478, but this date appears to be too late compared to the other segments. Either of his two predecessors would be more likely: Dietrich von Mörs (r.1414-1463) or Friedrich von Saarwerden (r.1370-1414). The inspiration for including it could have been the similar miniature of Ruprecht von Pfalz (DtKg 1400-1410) with six electors and the herald Claes Heinenzoon on Gelre fo. 26r.\(^7\)

The 43 items of segment 44 (83r-86r; 1302-1344) are not really parts of any pedigree display, but represent marriages with a partner from either Hainaut-Holland, Guelders, Juliers or Berg. In form, most have pairs of shields, but some are represented by impaled arms or are joined by arms holding an armorial banner.

3.1 The Burgund-Valois family

The five sets with members of the family falls in a group of three displays (41; 68v-69v; 1032-1044) and two disparate displays. The latter includes the first, but only formalized, marriage in 1439 of the heir Charles ‘le teméraire’ (1433-1477) and Catherine de France (1429-1446) as segment 21 (18v; 290-299) represented with an angel in a walled garden holding two trees garnished with banners of the ancestor, and with the arms of the wife dimidated with those of her husband. The second set imitates the helmeted lion sejant or ‘reuward de Flandrie’ traditional for the C.Flanders.\(^8\) The person is a nephew Jean created C. Étampes in 1434 as a fief of Burgundy (30; 43v; 571-575).

The last set in the group on 68v-69v displays the pedigree of Philippe ‘le bon’ (d.1461) as banners in a walled garden, while his shield of arms and crested helmet are held by a lady sitting. The pedigree of his father Jean ‘sans peur’ (d.1419) is a simple table around a figure in armorial dress with cap and sword. For his grandfather and founder of the dynasty Philippe ‘hardi’ (d.1404), there are only two arms on the side of the flower garlanded head of a man in a dress and ermine-lined cape of cloth-of-gold holding a staff-mace and having the arms of Burgundy-ancient above the head.

3.2 The foreign princes

Thirteen of the fifteen pedigree displays are placed as introductions to the nobles in the following segments. Only Arnold von Egmond D.Guelders (06; 7r; 103-108; r.1423-1473) and king Alonzo V of Portugal (33; 52v; 738-742; r.1438-81) have simple tabular displays and no segments of vassals or subjects. Similar displays are present in Bergshammar.

The unfinished tabular display of Friedrich III (d.1493), who succeeded his cousin Albrecht V in 1440 and was crowned emperor in 1452, has a closed imperial crown as crest on the helmet. Appropriately, it leads the segments of kings (24; 21v; 309-313). Albrecht V and his son Ladislas ‘posthumus’ leads part 2 of the austrarians (31; 56r; 799-809), though the latter never ruled Austria in his short life from 1440-1457. King Henry VI of England (no.576) likewise leads a part 2. Hesbaye is introduced by a leading noble Johan von Heinberg (no.1482), and Kleve, Tirol, Milan and Savoy by their princes, of whom Filippo Maria Visconti died in 1447 and Louis de Savoie succeeded in 1440. Konrad von Diepholz (no.2681) will be discussed below.

The three segments for Hainaut, Holland and Zeeland are led by two displays (70; 150rv; 2385-2399). The first has Albrecht von Wittelsbach C.Hainaut-Holland & D.Bavaria (d.1404) and his wife Margaretha von Brieg, maternal grandparents of Philippe ‘le bon’, and the second their successor Willem (d.1417), but not the last ruler Willem’s daughter Jakobëa, who resigned in 1433. The pedigrees are partially incorrect.

The set for Ludwig (1412-1450; no.386), who succeeded as C.Württemberg in 1419, is inserted on the right corner of 29v, the reverse of the ‘counts’ segment, with a badly drawn grilled helmet, but the pedigree is badly wrong. The parental line is right, but his mother was Henriette of Montbeliard and his maternal grandmother Marie de Châtillon. The arms given are those of Teck, a duchy bought in 1383 and the relatively obscure Liechtenstein from Wetzlar or Greifenstein.

The miniature on fo.109r and its exact copy in Bergshammar fo.47v (52a; 1575-1579) presents a minor enigma. The pedigree is perfect, but there are two candidate brothers. The older Johan succeeded as D.Kleve in 1448 and ought by rank and seniority to be the one intended. The younger Adolph S.Ravenstein (b.1425) was brought up at the burgundian court as a favourite of Philippe ‘le bon’ and became a noted joust, soldier-commander and administrator for the duke. He was nominated knight of the Golden Fleece (CTdO) in 1456.

3.3 The married couples

Of the couples listed in segment 44 (83r-86r; 1302-1344; 43 items), the first page has king Edward III of England and emperor Ludwig IV (of Wittelsbach-Bavaria), the second Wilhelm D.Juliers, Albrecht von Wittelbach C.Hainaut-Holland & D.Bavaria, and Gerhard C.Ravensberg. On the following pages there are more members of the Guelders, Juliers, Wittelsbach and Ravensberg families with a sprinkling of Habsburg, Burgund-Valois and Portugal. The latter pair (nos.1338-1339) represent Philippe ‘le bon’ and Isabella of Portugal. The segment appears to be a record up to c.1440 of nobility, which could be useful to a person with an interest in the family affairs of the ruling house and its german neighbours – a herald is the obvious, if not the only, candidate.

There are a few individual persons of notice, e.g. Johan Bp.Liège (no.1317) and some banners representing enfeoffments, e.g. of Juliers-Guelders (no.1322, 1331), though the situations do not reflect the actual facts.

4. Greater Burgundy

The politics of the anglo-french Hundred Year’s War, a series of fortunate marriages, a weak government, and an acquisitive activity created a small empire for a branch of the french royal family, the Burgundy-Valois. Its core was the duchy of Burgundy, which had recently reverted to the crown, and was given in 1364 to the second son, Philippe ‘hardi’ (d.1404), of king Jean II of France. The minority and feebleness of Charles VI (r.1380-1422) created two parties struggling for power in governing France: the ‘burgundians’ and the ‘orleanist/armagnac/dauphinists’. The heads of both parties were murdered, Louis D.Orleans in 1407 and Jean ‘sans peur’ D.Burgundy in 1419. The latter leading to enmity and war between France and what must now be called Greater Burgundy. By the time of the reconciliation of the two Valois branches in 1435 the duke of Burgundy, Philippe ‘le bon’ (1396-1467), ruled most of present Benelux and Northern and Northeastern France with the titles of duke of Burgundy, Brabant, Limbourg, Lorraine and Luxembourg; marquis of the Holy Roman Empire (for Antwerp), Namur, Zeeland and Zutphen; count of Palatine Burgundy, Artois, Charolais, Étampes, Flanders, Hainaut, Holland, Nevers and Rethel; lord of Friesland, Salins and Utrecht.10 Some of these titles were granted to other members of the branch, while other lordships were too small to be listed or only held temporarily. The titles themselves did not mean much, but territory and wealth did, and the county of Flanders was the most important entity. In addition, Philippe ‘bon’ did, or at least tried to, dominate principalities in the neighbourhood, especially in the subregion of Hesbaye, to which Namur and the princely diocese of Liège belonged. In terms of this armorial, his dominions cover 18 segments with 1154 items or 40% of the armorial – most of them to be found in other members of the TOISON D’OR group of armorials.11

4.1 Flanders
The main flemish segment 66 (113r-138r; 1992-2117; 126 items) appears to be a collation from 1430/40, independent of and supplementary to the 100 items in segment 13 of the Toison d’or. The apparent overlap is just 40 items, mostly at the beginning of the lists, but there are some instances where the same person is given arms with different brisures.12 Together both lists cover some 70 families among 180 entries (common items excluded), but not all families are represented in both lists. The list in LYN has more family members (many with christian names) than the one in ETO.13

The county of Artois was created c.1180 when king Philippe ‘auguste’ extracted four castellanies from the C.Flanders, who was his vassal. Parts of Artois was added to the apanage of Philippe ‘hardi’ in 1369, when he married the heiress to Flanders, and more of it was acquired in 1383, 1425 and lastly in 1435 as part of the franco-burgundian peace. The present segment 69 (143r-149r; 2232-2384; 153 items) may have been compiled at that time, and probably modified from an earlier collation. More of the lordships were in the hands of other families than those indicated by the arms in the segment, e.g. Humbercourt held by David de Brimeu, a CTdO (no.2252 with arms of Fretel de Vismes). Robert (VIII) de Bethune V.Meaux (no.2282) places it between 1373, when he inherited Meaux, and 1408, when he died. Several of the items were anonymous. It was later copied into a now lost fragment, and from there it was within a few years recopied into the Bergshammar.14

The list is headed by the territorial arms of the county and four constituent counties. The county of St.Pol has the arms used by the incumbent Luxembourg family, the other three counties have the arms of extinct families. The entries are mostly titled monsieur and surname, indicating that this is a list of knights. About 14% of the list was left without legends.

11 Non-GpETO segments are 02 & 15 Hesbaye, 17 Lorraine (1), 66 & 67 Flanders (1, 2); 77-78 Utrecht (1, 2):
12 Perceval de Halluin has inescutcheon of Ghistelle (his mother) in LYN:2059, but Piennes in ETO:549 (paternal lordship). Jacques Scaeck has a label in LYN:2060 in the company of his father Louis, but not alone in ETO:611.
13 More information on the persons and the offices held are available in Donche EL, and Eeckhout FM has more data and references than cited in this edition.
14 For details see Clemmensen EA, but in short, the layout of LYN is 3x4, the intermediate ‘X’ was copied by long lines across the two opposite pages, and from there the BHM-compiler copied it page by page on to his 3x3 layout.
4.2 Hainaut-Holland-Zeeland

The counties of Holland and Hainaut (Hennegau) were joined in personal union from 1299, when Jean II d’Avesnes (1245-1304) C.Hainaut succeeded to Holland. A junior line of Bavarian dukes of the house of Wittelsbach succeeded to both counties in 1345, and kept it until Philippe ‘bon’ annexed it in 1434 after having been its regent since 1425.

The curious single page segment 67 (139r; 2118-2131; 14 items) is headed by the lion or younger arms of Hainaut. The remaining arms are, except for Enghien, all Flemish and include a Flanders bastard and three members of the Ghistelle family. Most of the items have a later legend in hand C. The characteristic brisure of Jean ‘le blond’ de Melun (no.2120) places it c.1390.

The persons identified at the present level of examination suggest that the main Hainaut segment (71; 151r-154v; 2400-2486; 86 items) was finalized around 1440. The arms of some lordships that recently changed hands may have been retained, e.g. nos. 2403 Morialme and 2407 Werchin. This is supported by families with several members present, e.g. nos. 2481-2482 Canin, father (d.1457) and son (d.c.1486). It was not possible to determine whether some Christian or attributed names occurred later than those identified, e.g. nos. 2421 Canoine de Robersart (fl.1388) and 2453 Oliver de Coolhem (fl.1398).

Most of the people in the Holland segment 72 (115r-160r; 2487-2609; 123 items) had their principal properties in the modern provinces of Zuid-Holland and Utrecht, though a couple lived in the borderland of Dutch Noord-Brabant or in Zeeland. The compilation appears to be near contemporary and includes almost a third with no other armorial evidence and with little readily available information on family history or properties. Most appear to have held castles. As tradition bids, this collation begins with the most important nobles indicated with a ‘b’ as bannerets or barons: Brederode, Egmond, Wassenaer, Heusden, and Haamstede. Then follow the majority of entries with cadets of those houses mixed with middle or lower landowners with the more obscure clustered at the end. Christian names are few, most notable are the brothers Jan and Willem van Egmond (nos. 2490, 2492), who both died in 1451. Most other families and branches would have members active at least in the late 1430’s. However, there are a few outliers, e.g. nos. 2500/2507, which appear to be for the change of owners of Wateringen through Egmond to Naaldwijk; or Willem van Besoijen (no. 2593), active 1388-1392, who may have left only a daughter. Their names and arms may of course have been adopted by sons-in-law of sons-in-law.

15 www. www.kasteleninnederland.nl is a major source of ruins and castles that has now disappeared from the web.
Zeeland was a major territory within Holland, often noted by itself. With 15 siblings and cousins of three families and an additional 6 pairs, segment 73 (161r-162v; 2610-2646; 37 items) appear to be a survey of the more important nobles on the islands of the Maas-Schelde or Meuse-Escaut estuary. The survey was probably made some time before Philip van Borselen S.Kortgene died in 1431 (no.2614), when most of the identifiable persons were active. It may have been updated around 1435 noting the new title of Frank van Borselen as C.Ostrevant (no.2613) after his fall from grace after marrying the wittelsbacher countess Joanna, who was placed in his custody. The pair was then allowed to retire from public service with the title as payment for past services and future calm.

4.3 Brabant-Limburg
Segment 43 Brabant (75r-82r; 1122-1302; 180 items) includes some ancient lordships among contemporary nobles, mostly members of patrician families who held elected offices as magistrate-councillors (échevins / schepen / scabini or ammans) in the larger brabantian towns, i.e. Bruxelles, Louvain / Leuven, Malines / Mechelen, Tirlemont / Tienen and Anvers / Antwerp. Nearly fifty of the arms are also present among the participants in the tournament held on May 12th 1439 on the Grand Place in Bruxelles, many as unique pairs.

The second part of the dual duchy, Limbourg (51; 108rv; 1564-1575; 11 items), which is today divided between the Netherlands, Belgium, Germany and Luxembourg, has a few major lords with a handful of minor nobles, hardly representative of its potential.

4.4 Hesbaye-Luxembourg
Luxembourg was probably not annexed to Greater Burgundy at the time of compilation. The lead item in Segment 48 (93r-94v; 1432-1471; 40 items) is Elizabeth von Görlitz (Luxembourg) Ds.Luxembourg until it was claimed by Philippe ‘le bon’ in 1435 and 1441, contested by Jacob von Siérck Abp.Trier (no.341, 1414), but seized in 1443. Most of the individuals appear to be resident in the core area, similar to the present grand duchy. Large parts of the medieval duchy went to France in 1659, to Prussia in 1815 and more to Belgium in 1839.

The eastern parts of present Belgium have various overlapping designations. Most of them belonged to the diocese of Liège, but mostly in the spiritual sense. As a principality, the lay possessions were smaller and encompassed the county of Loon or Loos. By another designation, together with the county of Namur they belonged to the region of Hesbaye, which was by some writers and on maps extended to cover also the neighbouring Condroz, Famene and Campine, and even involved the small county of Heinsberg in Rhenish Juliers (Jülich). For the three segments discussed here, Hesbaye has the extended meaning.

The Heinsberg family is central and heading two segments. Their main interest was based on a claim to the counties of Loon (Loen, Loos) and Chiny dating back to a marriage from c.1300.17 A secondary interest came from Johan (1395-1459), who as Bp.Liège 1419-55 had mixed relations to Philippe ‘le bon’, while the attitude of the Liégeois had been for decades one of enmity.18 Segment 02 (3r-4r; 11-49; 39 items) has two subsegments, both headed by banners and indications of pretense. The first and shorter subsegment on fo. 3r is Germans. All items in the second subsegment are anonymous, and from Hesbaye. The ultra-short segment 15 (14r; 226-232; 7 items) are mostly anonymous repeats. The irregularity indicates an abandoned compilation. The larger segment 50 (104r-107r; 1482-1583; 82 items) has a pedigree display (50a) in the top left corner of fo.104r for Johan von Heinsberg Bp.Liège.19 It is followed by vassals of Liège, many anonymous.

4.5 Bourgogne & Franche Comté
The core of Greater Burgundy was the duchy of Burgundy as a fief of France, though Flanders was more important economically. Its pendant was the county palatine of Burgundy or Franche-Comté or Freigrafschaft Burgund, a fief of the empire, acquired at the same time as Flanders. To the south of the duchy lay Bresse and Bugey, two territories belonging to the C.Savoy, but coveted by D.Burgundy as counterweights to the royal french territory of the Mâconnais. Segment 42 (71r-74r; 1045-1119; 75 items) is headed by the arms of the duchy followed by a couple of major nobles or fiefs, the P.Orange (Châlons-Arlay), Montbéliard (now held by Württemberg), and Vienne. The segment was probably collated shortly before 1432, when Antoine de Toulongeon died (no.1066), and includes nobles from both the duchy, the county and from Bugey-Bresse.

4.6 Lorraine
The two small segments from Lorraine (17; 16r; 243-257; 15 items, name only; and 59; 122rv; 1769-1783; 15 items) are probably linked. The first has Philip von Sierck, brother of Jacob
Abp.Trier 1439-1456, as the only painted arms, while the second has the arms of the duchy of Lorraine followed by a couple of important lords (Salm-Blâmont, Sièrck) and Conrad von Bayer-Boppard Bp.Metz 1415-1459, the only dateable item. The duchy of Lorraine was then smaller than the four department regions of today and included two major sets of territories: the duchy of Bar and the three dioceses: Metz, Toul and Verdun. As only Metz is included here, the compilation must be a partial one and rather haphazard compared with other ‘surveys’ of lorrainian nobles and patricians.\footnote{See Blanchard RYN for an armorial with focus on Lorraine and nobles from Metz c.1475. Parisse NL for the nobility of Lorraine.} Philippe ‘le bon’ took control of Lorraine in 1430, so the basic collation was probably made some years later, probably at the same time as most of the other segments concerning Greater Burgundy.

4.7 Tournament in Utrecht 1441

The prince-bishop of Utrecht was not only the spiritual head of a large diocese, but also as vassal of the Holy Roman Empire and effectively of the count of Holland-Hainaut (by the 1434 Greater Burgundy) the ruler of a large territory comprising the present province of Utrecht (Nedersticht) and that of Overijssel, Drenthe and the city of Groningen (Oversticht or Oversyssel). From 1423-1455 the bishop was Rudolf von Diepholz, and the Lyncenich compiler assigned three consecutive segments to him and the town and territories. The first (76; 165v; 2681-2685; 5 items) has his ancestors, though some are misplaced, which is understandable for a genealogy of scion of a family from W of Hannover in Lower Saxony probably written in Southern Belgium.

The first half of the second segment (77; 166r-167r; 2686-2717; 31 items) lists nobles from the Nedersticht, incl. Jan van Vianen (d.1442, no.2689). Many of the second half cannot be identified with the resources available, but those that can appear to belong to the separate Oversticht bordering Friesland. The items on the last page (167r, no.2710-2717) may not belong to the segment, but could be some drafts and miscellaneous items added on the backside of a separate fragment (from segment 78). Fo.167r has two weakly painted arms and a sketch in the top row, all on shields slightly larger than normal. Row 2 has the shields (no crested helmets) of row 1 of fo.169r in the same place, and three and two shields in the bottom rows, all in standard layout size and place – only two belong to Utrecht, two are dutch and one probably german of utrechter origin.

The most interesting part is the third segment (78; 167v-170r; 2718-2768; 51 items), which indirectly refers to the diocesan capital and self-concious town of Utrecht. No dignitaries of the town are mentioned, but the town council and its officers were heavily engaged in the planning and course of a great tournament held on September 8-12th of 1441 in the Market Place. The town council was responsible for the practical arrangements, security, boarding and provisions, not least wine. The tournament was sponsored by one of the richest nobles in the Low Countries, Jacob van Abcoude (Zuylen) dit Jonkheer van Gaasbeek (no.2719), who paid 488 pounds for wine on the last day. The accounts mention the thirst of a Spanish visitor, who paid almost 6 pounds for wine, though he probably did not drink all of it himself. This must be Pedro Vasquez (no.2753), who served in the Bouchout party. The Utrecht sources only mention four other participants: Peter Bode (no.2757), Jan van Brugge (no.2755), Jan van Halmale (no.2756), and Jan van Meer (no.2758) – all from the same party, and like Bouchout guests from Brabant. Like many other participants, these four were veteran jousters, who also went to the tournament in Bruxelles in 1439. Many were also members of the urban patriciates of Bruxelles, Antwerp and other principal towns. Several of the nobles and patricians served in the entourage escorting Philippe ‘le bon’ to the conference in Arras in 1435. The list is not complete as Jean de Glymes S.Bergen-op-Zoom and Costen van Halmale are not included, but mentioned as present in the chronicle by Costen of his tournaments.

This segment may well be a separate manuscript fragment added later. The layout and content are different from the rest of the armorial, and the sheets appear to have been severely cut on the inside. The last items in the top rows of 167v and 168v are cut in half, suggesting that the segment was painted on single sheets. Apart from this segment there are only 25 crested helmets in the armorial, all in the pedigrees or heading segments. The style of helmets in the tournament is the flattened grilled or pageant type seen in the later addition in the Danish segment in Gelre (GEL:55v-56r, 550, 551, 553).

5. German allies of the duke of Burgundy

As the dukes of Burgundy used the 100+ years from 1364 to build their mini-empire on the northern edge of France, their influence on their neighbours increased. Some were incorporated as a result of marriage combined with military-political pressure, while the four or six principalities along both 21 I am indebted to Klaas Padberg Evenboer for drawing my attention to the findings of Giorgio Zanoli in the Utrecht Town Archive on which this is based. The three key elements are the Utrechtse Jaarboeken, town accounts and a single sheet in an armorial, compiled by Jaques le Boucq (d.1573) Toison d'Or roi d'armes per interim 1559; Zanoli TU.

22 The Bruxelles tournament is known from a 17th century source and edited in Eeckhout TBX. Jan van Meer (Ar 3 towers Gu) was in Bruxelles (TBX:195), but the TBX-compiler (or collator) transposed him and Simon Couderborch (Or chevron Gu ch. 3 mullets Ar) in TBX:194. The mistake was corrected by the 17C copyist of TBX, but had already entered BHM:339. The confusion became total when the Flemish Jan Coudenbergh, who bore (Gu 3 towers Ar), was given Ar-Gu in TBX:106.
sides of the lower Rhine became influenced, allied or even dependent on Philippe ‘le bon’. Though formally part of the Holy Roman Empire, they had for generations been almost independent of the emperor, but had their problems with the Archbishop-elector of Cologne and with each other.

The ruling dynasties intermarried, which led to changing combinations beginning with Guelders (Geldern) merging in 1138 with Zutphen leading to most of its territory being in modern Netherlands and the provinces of Zutphen and Gelderland. By 1339 Guelders was elevated into a duchy and in 1371 came into personal union with Juliers (Jülich) ruled by members of the House of Heimbach from 1208 and a duchy by 1356. A junior member of Heimbach got the county of Berg (Mons) in 1348 by marriage to the heiress of the C.Ravensberg & Berg. In 1380 Berg was also elevated to a duchy. As the senior line of Juliers-Heimbach became extinct in 1423, the rules of succession divided the twin duchies so that the junior Heimbach line now held Berg and Juliers, while Guelders went to the House of Egmond.

The C.Mark (on the east bank, and a cadet of Berg-Altena) got the county of Kleve in 1368 and had it elevated to a duchy in 1417. Adolf C.Mark (d.1448) married Marie, daughter of Jean ‘sans peur’, and their sons were raised at the court of the D.Burgund, and in time served that house in various capacities.

The dynastic relations between not only the Rhenish principalities but also those connecting them with England and the House of Wittelsbach for taking over Hainaut-Holland are recorded in segment 44 (83r-86r; 1302-1344; 43 items).

The Rhenish nobility often had properties in more than one principality and might serve not only their immediate overlords, but also neighbouring princes, e.g. a man from Guelders might hold offices in Brabant, Juliers and Cologne – even at the same time, and independent of the state of personal unions.

5.1 Guelders

Guelders (Geldern) is covered by two separated segments, of which the first (06; 7r; 103-107; 5) gives the pedigree that brought the duchy to the Egmond family in 1423 through marriages of an Arkel to the eventual Heimbach-Juliers heiress, and their daughter Marie (d.1415) to Jan van Egmond (d.1451), who became regent for their son Arnold (1410-1473) during his minority. For Arnold, the compiler kept the arms of Juliers impaling Guelders, which was only appropriate for his great uncle Reinald (d.1423).

23 Eeckhout CH 17.
The second segment (63; 126r-129r; 81 items) of nobles is peculiar. On first sight, it could be a contemporary collation, but unlike most other segments, there are no Christian names in the list. When compared to other armorials, there is a not unexpected concordance with the slightly younger Bergshammar armorial, but also a major overlap with both Gelre and Bellenville. The second trigger becomes apparent by looking at the structure, which is like a semi-ordinary – arms grouped by figure and colours. Realigning the Lyncenich items with Gelre does not give a satisfactory fit, but doing it with Bellenville reveals a concordance with the series BEL:1000-1022, 1030-1057, 1106-1133 (only single items and two triples omitted), and 12 items present between BEL:1058-1105. The Lyncenich-compiler has reused either segment BEL segment 40 or a very close clone or source, at least 2 generations older.24 A convenient short-cut, if he did have access to any recent collation of noble arms, or if Guelders really did not interest him that much. After entering the more important nobles, he noted that there were many similar arms, so he extracted these and entered them together. After drawing and colouring seven pages he quit leaving the last row as uncoloured sketches only. There is no explanation of whether he got tired, was disturbed, or simply thought that there was no need to do the last half of the Bellenville segment. The unfinished row makes the middle option the more probable.

5.2 Juliers-Berg-Ravensberg

There is no pedigree for Gerhard (VII, d.1475), the former Domherr, who inherited Juliers (Jülich), Berg, and Ravensberg in 1437. Instead there are three separated short segments, of which the first two (Juliers-Berg, Ravensberg) have the 4x4 layout used for the first 10%, and Juliers the more common 3x4 layout.

The Juliers-Berg segment (05; 6v; 91-102; 12 items) mentions Gerhard with a coat of arms, three banners, and by name. The first item has the arms of all three dominions, the second his name, but omits Ravensberg. Guelders, which went to Arnold van Egmond, is included as number four. The compilation has three other datable items: Rupprecht von Virneburg, active 1391-1444, and Philip of Nassau (1418-92), place this compilation of men from both sides of the Rhine to c.1442. The second banner in the Ravensberg segment (10; 10v; 162-175; 14 items) is blank. The compilation is probably of the same date, and also with nobles from all over the region.

24 Gelre (c.1400/10) and Bellenville (c.1390/1405) used the same source(s) extensively, which was probably one or two generations older. Clemmensen EA, ch.12.
The last segment (60; 123r-124r; 1784-1817; 34 items) appears to be a collation of men from Juliers, all anonymous and concordant with Toison d’or segment 04 (ETO:187-215), which was probably compiled before 1435, and copied by the Lyncenich-compiler.25

5.3 Kleve-Mark

The two sons of the D.Kleve were brought up at the court of Philippe ‘le bon’. The first subsegment (52a; 109v; 1575-1579; 5) has a nice miniature pedigree-allegory of a swan with the crested helmet of Kleve and the arms on banners.26 The swan refers to the Swan Knight, the legendary founder of the Kleve dynasty (not the present Mark-Altena dynasty).27 The key person is Johan (1419-1481), who succeeded in 1448. The arms are Kleve impaling Mark, which is as expected, though Johan would later use the principalities quartered, and his younger brother Adolf S.Ravenstein (1425-92) with an escutcheon of Jean ‘sans peur’ D.Burgund. The other side (109r) was blank at the time. This miniature may not date the armorial, but simply be a bow to a well-liked young heir. If fo.109 is a single half-sheet, it could have been added later

The nobles in subsegment 52b (110r-111r; 1580-1609) headed by the arms of Kleve had their origin all over the region, but several are known as vassals of Kleve, even holding hereditary offices as marshal or chamberlain.

Though there are no major nobles in the Mark segment (80; 173r-174r; 2792-2827; 36), with very few exceptions, they had their possessions in the county of Mark. The sheets were badly cut on binding, and one third lacks legends.

6. England

The leaves with the arms of the english nobility appear to have been split during binding or probably some time before into two parts. A single leaf was placed early as segment 07 (8rv; 108-128; 21 items) containing the natural lead part of the compilation.28 The main part of it follows an introduction in the later hand C which states on fo.44r that this subpart includes 185 arms on 18

25 It includes a series of arms based on Argent fess sable, which in extended form can also be found in Paris, BnF, fr.18651:145r-146v, in the armorial Coislin-Seguier, and also in the closely related Rineck.
26 The miniature was copied, probably by the same painter, onto Bergshammar fo.47v. Both miniatures are of approximately same size. Fo.47r has two arms (no crests, probably by a different painter) belonging to the previous segment, the rest of the page blank.
28 In the absence of a codicological analysis, any mention of single leaves, sheets or quires is pure speculation, but follows from the way the contents are distributed.
leaves. The present compilation (LYN-en) has 183 items on 18 leaves in three segments. The first, by logic, is a pedigree display (31; 44v, 576-580; 5 items) of the four ancestral families of king Henry VI of England (r.1422-1461). The last part (32; 45r-51v; 576-581; 161 items) lists most of the standard part of the english nobles found among the members of the TOISON D’OR group. The last item of the segment is an anonymous coat of arms identified as that of William Bruges Garter king-of-arms 1415-1450, placed as no.581 alone on 51v.

The original collation was probably made during the summer of 1397 and by a tenuous extension by a burgundian pursuivant in the service of Isabella of France, queen and wife of Richard II (r.1377-1399).29 Some of the arms and the selection of the dukes, earls and barons is the turbulence of the Lancastrian Revolution, which later led to the War of the Roses. During this upheaval many peers forfeited, were banished or executed, and some reinstated in rank and property – more or less so.30 Neither the collator nor the later compiler-copyists were well-acquainted with the english language, as is evident from the bad spelling in the legends, but the ranking of the peers appears to be sensible. The legends are very similar for this segment among the group members. Other variations between the Lyncenich and the principal members of the group are discussed below.

It appears from comparison that it is likely that ETO-en was derived from APA-en, and that BHM-en was copied from ETO-en. The LYN-en has nearly all the items in ETO-en, omitting only 13 entries, of which the trio ETO:844-846 Radcliffe, Clinton and Stawell, was added from members of the english embassy to the Arras conference of 1435. Other omissions are three earls (ETO:710, 713, 714, Huntingdon, Salisbury, and Arundel) and the unusual Harington-Loring-Courtenay (ETO:810) combination. Among the 22 additions are 10 with legends similar to items in the Gelre, e.g. LYN/GEL items 110/79, 112/80, 114/83; 656/189, 671/192, 672/193; 707/238, 708/239. Unlike the straight ETO-BHM concordance, all overlaps between LYN and the other members are in the form of short 3-6 item fragments added in a reasonably similar sequence.

The lead items (nos.109-114) are a particular addition to this compilation. Unlike the pedigree display in segment 31, which is clearly for Henry VI, these items must be for Henry V and added (or at least reflect the situation) before 1416, when Thomas Beaufort (no.114) was created 29 The reference sequence and treatment of the english in the TOISON D’OR (Golden Fleece) group is ETO-en as given in Clemmensen RH (2006), but various concordances and aspects within the group are also discussed in Clemmensen RW (2002), Clemmensen APA (2006), Clemmensen GR (2006) and the forthcoming Clemmensen EA.

30 The politics of the time and many of the personalities are discussed in Given-Wilson HH (listing of king’s knights), Bennett RR, Walker LA and Tuck R, works used as supplentary documentation and background for the identifications in the segments.
D. Exeter. Edward D. York (no. 113) was killed at Agincourt on October 25th 1415. Most of the earls following may be identified with the incumbents of 1397 or of c.1455.

There are a few crucial differences between the painted arms in LYN and ETO-en, e.g. Mortimer E. March (no. 115) with the proper Mortimer arms qtg Ulster, not the confounded version in ETO, BHM a.o; and the lions on the chief in no. 733 Depden.

7. France

The arms of the nobility of the kingdom of France is listed in two separate segments with little overlap and using different layouts. The overlap is only 19 out of 69 and 100 items, of which 5 belong to the royal family, which in any case can be expected to head any ‘national’ compilation.

The first of the two segments, 29 (38r-42v; 502-570; 69 items31) lists only dukes and counts and may conveniently be divided into five subsegments according to contents and/or relations to other armorials. Except for fo.39rv it is in a 3x3 layout with a 3 blanks (41r9, 41v9, 42r6) and tails blank. The first of these (nos. 502-515) lists the king, the dauphin, and the semi-mythological set of twelve peers of France (Douze Pairs). This set of six lay and six spiritual peers, subdivided into three dukes and three counts each, is a transformation of the twelve companions of Charlemagne mentioned in the popular verse-novel Song of Roland.32 It probably got its present form at the end of the 12th century in several novels, e.g. Chanson d’Antioche, Chanson des Saxons, Chanson de Douze Pairs de France, and was adopted as part of the ceremonial of the salving and crowning of the French kings no later than for Philippe V in 1316.33 The Douze Pairs phenomenon had a revival during the mid-to-late 15th century with arms included in most of the armorials of the TOISON D’OR group and their later clones. The arms can also be found in the Berry and the Gorrevod armorials and as frontispiece in the compendium on French history by Robert Gaugin (c.1434-1501).34

The second subsegment (39rv; nos. 516-525; 2x3 layout) has some similarities to Bergshammar, but these are probably incidental as the BHM 29 segment is a copy from the Toison d’or. The third and the fifth subsegments (nos. 526-553; 564-570) has no discernible relation to any examined armorial, while the fourth subsegment (nos.554-563) was probably the source of BHM 43b (BHM:2650-2655, incl. some bis-numbers), though the BHM set has more 'name only' items.

The items in segment 29 were probably extracted from a traditional list, so (almost) any of the persons named in the edition should only be regarded as supplementary information. However, there are some updates to the general listing, which gives it a burgundian flavour. The arms of Berry (no.518) were only used by Jean de France from 1360-1416 and provides little information for dating. Better help comes from the curious insertion of two pairs of portuguese princes (nos.524-525, 565-566). The first pair are two brothers of Isabella, who in 1430 married duke Philippe 'le bon'. The second pair are two of her other brothers, Duarte (d.1442), who succeeded his father João I in 1433, and the eldest, but natural brother Affonso D.Braganza (d.1461). The best evidence comes from the C.Étampes with arms of Burgundy-Valois quartering Artois (no.532). Jean (1415-1491), a younger brother of the C.Nevers, was given this title by his uncle Philippe 'le bon' in 1434 as a fief of Burgundy, though Charles VI had given the title in 1421 to Richard de Bretagne. But that was at a time when France and Burgundy were enemies after the dauphin (later Charles VII) had murdered duke Jean 'sans peur' in 1419.

The second french segment 68 (139v-142v; 2132-2231; 100 items) presents one major problem of analysis. There are no legends in the primary hand, and very few in the secondary hand B, which means that the compiler left no indications as to which persons (or families), he had included. The layout is uniformly 4x4 with three blank places (140v15-16, 141v16) and space left on the last page. Fortunately there are more than a dozen coats of arms that are sufficiently unique by themselves or in combination to allow for a possible date of collation. There are no obvious indications of any updating of the original collation, which does have dukes and counts in the lead, but the high officers spread among the untitled nobility. The presence of many arms in the Gelre helped identification.

Among the royal family are the arms of Burgundy (Valois) as no.2134 in the form used by Philippe 'hardi' from 1363 to his death in 1404. No.2147 has the arms of the Dormans family with a crosier over all. That leaves three candidates Jean (d.1373), Miles (d.1387) and Guillaume (d.1405), of which Jean and Miles were both chancellors of France and Bp.Beaouvais. The military could be represented by the connétables Bertrand du Guesclin (d.1380, no.2178) and Oliver Clisson (d.1407, no.2180); the only maréchals serving from 1369-91: Jean S.Blainville (d.1391, no.2183) and Louis de Champagne C.Sancerre (d.1402, no.2184, connétable 1397); the admiral Jean de Vienne (d.1396, nos.2176, 2187). Pierre dit ‘le beque’ de Villaines (d.1406, no.2150) has the unique Castille-Leon argumentation awarded in 1369. Enguerrand de Coucy (d.1398) only returned to French service after the death of Edward III in 1377. These persons point to a time of collation from 1378-80.

8. Germany and Europe

The compiler was hardly interested in covering all of Christian Europe, or perhaps lacked sufficient information to include the parts south of the Pyrenees and Alps and north of the Baltic Sea. Scotland was also omitted. France, England, Burgundy and its dependents were discussed above. The present chapter covers the rest of the Holy Roman Empire, which in reality was a patchwork of all-German principalities, Milan in Northern Italy, Savoy on the fringe of the Alps, the area of conflict between the Teutonic Order in Prussia and Poland-Lithuania, and including a listing of the arms of the Christian realms.

8.1 North Western Germany

The lay principalities of the three archbishop-electors, which were also honorary arch-chancellors of the Holy Roman Empire, dominated much of North-Western Germany, and have twinned segments: Mainz-Germania (04, 47; 5v-6r, 93r; 70-90, 1425-1431; 19, 7 items); Cologne-Italia (09, 45; 10r, 88r-91v; 150-161, 1345-413; 12, 68 items); Trier-Gallia (12, 46; 11v-12r, 92r; 182-206,1414-1424; 25, 11 items). There is also a small segment (11; 11r; 176-181; 6 items) which has two abbots in a slightly different hand. The early segments have 4x4 layouts and almost all entries in Mainz and Trier are names only without arms. The later segments have 3x4 layouts, coats-of-arms, and were probably collated 1440/44, as indicated by the periods of office of the archbishops and the few dateable prominent nobles. Many entries have Christian names.

It appears that the more distant territories of Mainz and Trier did not interest the compiler as much as Cologne, which was interlinked with the dependencies of the D.Burgundy. The last half of the short 06 Mainz (no.81-90) segment was probably never intended for this, as it has mostly people with possessions in Thuringia and Franconia.

The North-West is rounded off by a short segment of nobles listed with their Christian names (14;13rv; 211-255; 15 items), all living within reach of the lower part of the German Rhine.

35 There is a note on fo.138v indicating 114 arms following. The number corresponds to 14 items in the curious fo.139r
Finally there is the penultimate short segment (79; 172rv; 2770-2791; 22 items) of vassals and men in the service of Heinrich von Mörs Bp.Münster 1424-50.

8.2 Northern Germany

The northern provinces of Mecklenburg, Pomerania and Brandenburg are nominally covered by three segments, but they are neither well-organized nor representative. The margrave-elector of Brandenburg has his arms of Zollern, BGf.Nuremberg and MGf.Brandenburg in segment 13 (12v; 207-210; 4 items and 11 blank shields). Similarly the D.Mecklenburg has his arms in 03a (4v; 50-53; 4 items, 8 blank shields). Segment 57 (120rv; 1732-1746; 15 items) ought to be vassals of the D.Pomerania-Stettin, but the identifiable entries belong to all three provinces.

Neither the half-segment 03b (5r; 54-69; 16 names only) nor the short 22 (19r; 300-305; 6 names only) have any relation to the North. They appear to be listing swabian nobles. The backside 5v has the Abp-elector of Mainz, followed by 6r with silesians and 6v with men from Juliers-Berg.

8.3 Austria and Bohemia

The Habsburgs succeeded the Luxemburgers as emperors and kings of the Romans in 1438, but only two years later their territories were split. Hungary went to the short-lived Ladislas ‘postumus’ (1440-1457), while the major portion of Austria and Bohemia came to his uncle emperor Friedrich III. His dominions are divided into three Austrian segments (08, 36, 40; 9rv, 57v-61v, 67rv; 129-149, 810-927, 1010-1031; 21, 118, 22 items), one from Tirol (53; 113r-115v, 66 items), and one from Bohemia and Moravia (39; 65r-66v; 44 items). These are all in the 3x4 layout with legends in the rougher, but contemporary hand B.

The majority of the Austrians (segments 08 and 40) are concordant, though in discrete fragments, with the austrians in the TOISON D’OR group. These may well have been handed over to the burgundian heralds by Hendrik van Heessel, while he stayed at the court of Philippe ‘le bon’, and reflect the better known nobles active 1430/40. The last segment 40, which have many items in common, were probably derived from a different source. The Habsburger hereditary territories (Erbländer) are repeated several times in the armorial.

segment (see 4.2 Hainaut-Holland) and the 100 in segment 68 France.

36 Pedigrees in segments 24 and 35. Hungary were of no interest to the Lyncenich compiler.

37 The Heessel compendium (CHE) has the Austrians and Bohemians painted by the same studio, if not the same artisan, as that of the TOISON D’OR and the PAIX D’ARRAS.
The Bohemians and Moravians must also derive from the same source and are present in the TOISON D’OR group, though not in Toison d’or itself. An independent and slightly earlier source of Bohemian and Moravian arms is Povey’s German Roll, London, College of Arms, ms. B 23:43r-61v, nos.191-342, which has many of same entries as the Lynenich.\(^{38}\)

8.4 Southern Germany
The territories roughly south of a line along the river Main covering the present Länder: Rheinland-Pfalz, Baden-Württemberg, and Bayern have six smallish segments and 124 entries, which cannot be representative of the nobility of the area. The County Palatine has two supplementary segments 19 and 37 (17r, 62rv; 270-283, 942-965; 14, 24 items), of which segment 19 has a number of fairly young people (born between 1415-21) identifiable by their christian names.

The ancient duchy of Swabia has segment 18 (16v; 258-269; 12 items, mostly names only) with the arms of Baden, and 56 (118r-119r; 1699-1731; 33 items) led by the fess of lozenges arms of the D.Swabia only found in armorials from France and the Low Countries, while German armorials prefer the lions of Hohenstaufen as in the present Baden-Württemberg arms.

Segment 38 (63rv; 942-965; 24 items) is small, but gives several important families from Upper and Lower Bavaria and the Upper Palatine (OberPfalz) between Ratisbon and Bayreuth. The Franconians are in 64 (129v-130v; 1922-1948; 27 items) led by Johann von Brunn (d.1440) Bp.Würzburg 1411, and possibly with the Hohenfeldt qtg Aufsess arms for Friedrich von Aufsess (d.1440) Bp.Bamberg 1421 as no.1945, though the Aufsess were hereditary Erbschencken of Bamberg.

8.5 Kings, princes and counts
Though the Lynenich-compiler preferred to list his entries by territories or marches d’armes, he could not abstain from adding three segments of the traditional order by rank, though the counts are all German, except for four Italians. The kings reflect contemporary use (25; 22r-24v; 314-336; 23 items) and were copied by the Bergshammer-compiler for his first segment. The only unusual entries are for Jerusalem with the Lotharingia arms of Godefroid de Boullion and arms of Friesland – both of interest to Philippe ’le bon’, and those of Valencia. The princes and a part of the counts were likewise adopted by the Bergshammar-compiler (26, 28; 25r-29r, 30r-36r; 337-385, 391-501; 49, 111 items). A pedigree of Württemberg was inserted on an empty backside (29v).

\(^{38}\) Povey’s Czech Roll would better reflect the contents. Described in Campbell CA 217-218, all entries are listed in The princes are led by the electors followed by dukes from Germany, Silesia, Poland and Lithuania, claiming imperial prerogatives over those realms and principalities, which did not consider themselves subject to the emperor. Some of the counts cannot be identified or verified using the common references, but they present a comprehensive view of the upper layer of the class. Some of the dukes and counts are titles extinct and represent territories taken over by other princes. The layouts used for the three segments are unique in this armorial.

8.6 Milan and Savoy
Both the Milan (54, 55; 116v, 117rv; 1676-1680, 1681-1698; 5, 18 items) and the Savoy (61, 62; 124v, 125rv; 1818-1822, 1823-1840; 5, 18 items) segments were introduced by pedigrees of the reigning dukes: Filippo Maria Visconti of Milan (1391-1447) and Louis of Savoy (1413-40), who succeeded in 1440. Many of the Milanese could not be identified, but some of the identifiable families had members serving as condottieres in the early part of the 15th century. The Savoyards belong mostly to two important families.

8.7 Prussia, Poland and Lithuania
The 121 entries from Eastern Europe list some major players in the end game of the conflict between the fading Teutonic Order in Prussia and the resurgent alliance of Poland and Lithuania after the defeat of the former at Tannenberg in 1410. The Teutonic knights in segment 65 (131r-132v; 1949-1991; 43 items) are easily dateable by the arms of Paul von Russdorf, who served as Hochmeister or Grand Master 1422-41. This list is unique as the rules forbade the knights to use personal arms as one of the signs of accepting virtual anonymity and submission to the monastic life of a warrior of the Church. Usually only the family arms of the Grand Masters were listed, or in isolated cases given with the cross of the Order added to funeral plaques or entries for heads of local supporting Kommendes in Germany and the Low Countries. Besides the list in Lyncenich, three other versions (all slightly different) are known: the Nicolas Lutzelbourg (NLU) of c.1540, its close copy Clémery (BnF, fr.23076:113r-114v), and BnF, fr.23077:32rv, a much later clone of the Urfé. Many of the entries cannot be identified, but some of the holders of high offices can, and they point to a collation of 1430/31.

The segments for Poland and Lithuania (34, 58; 53r-55r, 121rv; 743-798, 1747-1768; 56, 22 items) are probably contemporary and may have been collated by the same visitor. The folio Clemmensen OM and will be published later. The Czech arms and the context are discussed in Ruzek CE.
before 53rv was probably lost, as it would have had the same content as Bergshammar fo.146r1-147v2. More than half of the entries are anonymous, but many were identified by Adam Heymowski, who during 1968-90 studied these segments in the Lyncenich and the Bergshammar intensively, much helped by his command of both Polish, German and French. While the Lithuanians are headed by the arms of the Grand Duke, probably Vytautis (d.1430), and contain mostly territorial arms, his cousin King Ladislas Jagiello of Poland (d.1434) and before 1385 known as Grand Duke Jogaila of Lithuania, is absent from the list of Polish nobles.

9. Date and relations to the TOISON D’OR group

Apart from the initial work on description of the manuscript, transcription and identification of items, four questions are central for the analysis of any armorial manuscript: What are the dates of collation, compilation and execution of its component parts; who were the persons involved (artists, artisans, heralds, amateur armorists, commissioner); what are the relations to other armorials or possibly to literary or archival materials; and finally what were the intentions and purposes in making such a manuscript? With regret and apart from some arguments on the dates and relations this editor can only put forward some airy hypotheses as answers to those questions. In this, the present edition unfortunately differs little from similar works, but in the hope that future researchers may find some useful materials for study, here are my conclusions and hypotheses.

9.1 Structure and dates

The arms in the manuscript appear to have been painted by one person only, and one with some skill in drawing and painting, but not a high-class illustrator. For the untrained eye the miniatures may have been his work too, or they may have been commissioned from a professional illustrator.39 The painter may have been the compiler, but nothing in the manuscript argues against an artisan working as directed by a compiler-commissioner. In most cases the legends must have been added after painting, as there are two dominant hands and many items without legends. The many ‘name only’ items suggest that the compiler hoped for further sources, or needed more time to digest what he had. This also suggests that he worked partly from lists of names, which he could use for structuring his chapters (segments). The disjunct concordances with other armorials indicate that he may to some extent have worked from fragmented sources as well as intact armorial manuscripts or quires ready for copying.

As described above and in Appendix 1, the armorial, as presently bound, may be divided into 80 segments, though afterthoughts upon reading the identified items suggests that some segments ought to be split into two. Several realms or principalities are represented by two or more segments with very few overlaps, mostly high nobles, though one of the paired segments of the archdiocese-electorates is usually with ‘name only’ entries. Except for England, the pairs use different layouts. This suggests that several sources were used, and even a cursory comparison will show that at least half the segments came from sources used by members of the TOISON D’OR group of armorials, as discussed below.

From a datation perspective there are three types of segments: tables of arms and names with or without internal order; pedigrees where the key person ought to be identifiable; and a tournament (segment 78), which was held in the autumn of 1441. So the manuscript could not have been finished before 1441. Not all of the pedigrees need to have been made at the same time, and only half of them have some kind of miniature associated. Most would have been living or have recently died around 1440. The exception is Johan von Kleve (no.1575, miniature on 109v, also in Bergshammar), who only succeeded in 1448, but he was living at the burgundian court, and may have been included as a favourite of either the duke or the compiler. Alonzo V, a nephew of the duchess Isabelle, succeeded to Portugal in 1438, a fact that would have been known at court shortly after (no.738, no miniature). So would the accession of Sigismund of Habsburg to Tirol in 1439. The marriage of the heir Charles and Catherine de France in 1439 would have been known even before it took place (no.290, miniature with angel on18v). Ladislas ‘postumus’ of Habsburg with Hungary qtg Bohemia (no.799, sketch on 56r) presents a minor problem. His father Albrecht died late in 1439 and was succeeded as king of the Romans in 1440 by his cousin Friedrich III as that office was elective, while Ladislas was in principle the hereditary successor to Hungary and Bohemia – and only recognized in Bohemia in 1453. His more than tender age would explain why a county's nobles would hesitate to proclaim him king. However, such pragmatism may not have precluded an armorist (or possibly a herald!) for stating him as a king. Considering the spread of pedigrees throughout the manuscript and the general sequence of its contents, it is likely that the project was begun sometime in 1440 and finished during 1442, perhaps even in late 1441. The odd identifiable entries in the tables support the interval, not least the several young men from Bruxelles and other parts of Brabant (segment 43) born shortly before 1420 and becoming active and noted around 1440. The absence of the downturn of fortune for the persons involved in the insurrection in Utrecht of 1448 makes it almost certain that it was before that time.

Though the numbering of the introductory notes or chapter headers were probably written by a later owner (hence counting items), they probably reflect the order at the time. If so, much of the later reordering could have been caused by shuffling of quires and loose sheets or half-sheets – and would have been minor. If so, the change of layout style would have been either inspired by one of the sources or by a wish to have a little more space for the arms and accompanying names. Sixteen images in four rows across 14 cm (A5, a paperback novel) leave very little room for writing and painting. A little experimentation may also have been tried between 22r and 52v. The present sequence is not logical, but could be explained by the compiler adding segments as they became available after removing superfluous elements, adding or modifying items as they suited him or not. He also added a second segment, even if he already had a territory included. He may have used notes or fragments for some segments as discussed in relation to the TOISON D’OR group below. For others, he must have copied from an available armorial – probably using an unbound quire fragment rather than a bound volume.

9.2 Sources and the TOISON D’OR group of armorials

Apart from a few sporadic indications, the only identifiable sources are materials used by members of the TOISON D’OR groups of armorials, i.e. Toison d’or, Bergshammar, Paix d’Arras, Heessel Compendium, and the later Lutzelbourg, Clémery, LeBlancq, and ARS. The term ‘materials’ is used here, as it takes some analysis to determine whether or to what degree the segments in Lyncenich were themselves sources used by others (donor), copies or modifications of segments in other members (recipient), or whether they used common sources. As was demonstrated by Jan Raneke in 1975 and extended later by Clemmensen, the basic unit to be compared must be the segment or subsegment, not the armorial manuscript as a whole.40

The dates of manufacture are obviously prime factors in deciding which option to prefer and makes for easy exclusion of the later members. For the four near contemporary members the situation is slightly more difficult to resolve. As a first approximation Bergshammar, which was not completed before 1456, should be a recipient, while Toison d’or, nearly completed by 1436, ought to be a potential donor, as would Paix d’Arras (of post 1435) and Heessel as supplier of austrian arms in his capacity of Ruyers king of arms, an imperial office. The final assessment gets more complicated as the manuscripts were probably kept as loose quires at the time.

Given the connections of Hendrik van Heessel with the court and nobility of habsburgian Austria and Bohemia and his year-long presence at the court of the D.Burgundy, it is most likely that he brought with him a fairly up to date list of arms and names of nobles. As the Austrian segment is present in both Toison d’or and Heessel in versions from the same workshop, these were probably executed as soon as he arrived, i.e. 1434/36, from notes and/or sketches rather than coloured drawings. The Bergshammar austrians were copied from Toison d’or as the two segments are colinear, while all the others are concordant by fragments and Lyncenich has some items that are not in the other versions, and a few that are only in Heessel. Though the bohemians and moravians are not in Toison d’or, they must also have come from Hendrik van Heessel. The arms of his relative Jan van Heessel is in LYN:2768.

The concordance by fragments is a recurring problem when one compares members of this group. In some cases, notably from Bergshammar, it is easy to determine that segments were copied from the Toison d’or and not a close. There would normally be colinearity between the two, or in the case of the english segment, a shift in the copying mode from simple page-by-page to copying by long lines across an open book (or quire). How does one explain the fragmentary copying? One obvious possibility is that the source was a collection of scraps where each scrap held a fragment of the segment. Various copyists working with the collection then used the scraps in different order. This may be the case in some instances, but hardly here. An alternative, but not simple solution is that different compilers used the same source, but copied it in different modes, and/or copied from different copy-generations made in different formats. If the latter can be shown, there is a side-benefit as evidence of cooperation or at least a link through generations. The analysis is rather time-consuming, so it was not performed for the Lyncenich, but a demonstration was made showing that the english in Paix d’Arras were copied from Toison d’or. In the example 41 BHM:588 David de Bourgogne Bp.Utrecht 1456. Hendrik van Heessel was probably Austria king of arms in 1434, confirmed as Ruyers in 1440, and known by heralds at the burgundian court by the former date, see summary of his career in Clemmensen OM.

42 The same opinion was stated in Pastoureau ETO 2:36, bound first time after 1461.
43 The copy of austrians in APA/b, BnF, fr.8199, ff. 2r-12r4 + 16r-17r + 76r5-79v1 + 87r5-87v4, is a painted copy of c.1660 by marquis d'Haucourt from a (now lost) source in Bruxelles.
44 See Clemmensen RW and Clemmensen RH for the details.
45 Another example of cross-generational link is provided by the reuse of Gelre of c.1410 for Bergshammar of c.1456.
46 Any party interested in doing so may obtain the data from the database version of Clemmensen OM or get a printed version by request.
47 The analysis of the English is described in Clemmensen APA with a diagram in Appendix F. For ease of comparing, serial rather than actual numbers were used for the two armorials.
ETO:78v-81v, painted in a 5x5 layout, was compared with APA:94t-95v, 103r-106r, painted by the same workshop in a 4x4 layout. If one accepts some transpositions, gaps and additions not uncommon in copying, it is easy to see that the Paix d’Arras compiler copied the Toison d’or by long lines. If the result of a first analysis is unsatisfactory and unpalatable, one may try a reassessment assuming an intermediate of defined layout. The length and composition of the fragment may suggest which intermediate ought to be tried. It works if there is only one copy-generation in between. If there are more, only advanced computer simulation of the type used in molecular genetics will do. In any case, one would have the suggestion of more copies having been made within a group of closely connected people.

The Toison d’or (or its source) was probably used for Holland (LYN 72, an extract), Juliers (LYN 60), Poland (LYN 34), and Zeeland (LYN 73, expanded version). For Bergshammar the relation appears that this compiler used Lyncenich extensively as a source, blending it with items from Gelre and possibly also from Toison d’or. Besides noted in Appendix 1, one may note that the counts (LYN 28) have several fragmental overlaps with BHM 03, and that many of the participants in the Utrecht 1441 tournament (LYN 78) ended up in BHM 09. The Armorial equestre de Gilles Rebecque is another armorial which may be a recipient from either Lyncenich or Bergshammar. It has many of the items from Mark (LYN 80, BHM 07, ERQ 16).48

There appear to be some odd coincidences in markers (mistaken name-blazon combinations) between Gelre and Lyncenich, e.g. LYN:1261 and GEL:872 Quadebeck (Westmael), but it would have been too time consuming to systematically check all entries who were not obvious parts of the TOISON D’OR group.

9.3 People and purpose
There is no textual or archival evidence for the making of the Lyncenich. The earliest ex libris dates from 1531. What we do have is indirect knowledge of its compiler. He was a member of a circle of people, who exchanged manuscripts (or quire parts), and one of whom owned the Gelre, made a generation earlier. They also had access to at least a copy of a fragment of an armorial compiled 150 years earlier (Wijnberghen). They also had friendly contacts to Hendrik van Heessel, a herald born in dutch Guelders, who served both the german emperor and the duke of Burgundy, and was a successor to Gelre Herald as Ruyers king of arms. The Lyncenich-compiler had an interest in the genealogy of princes, in the nobility and patricians of Brabant to the extent of collecting the names and arms of even young men. He also had an interest in the goings-on in the diocese and town of Utrecht, and also in tournaments. He may have been the collator of the arms of the participants. He also included segments for nearly all parts of Greater Burgundy, most thoroughly for those in the Low Countries. For the duchy and the county palatine most high nobles are included, but there must have been more ‘gentry’ around, when the duke came to Dijon. If it had been a 16th or 17th century manuscript, he might have been a gentleman-bibliophile like Alexandre le Blancq, S.Meurchin & B.Bailleul (c.1520-1575), owner and probably commissioner of the LeBlancq and his circle in Lille. Such a gathering was hardly probable a hundred years earlier. The more simple hypothesis makes him a herald in the service of the D.Burgundy and the circle a virtual ‘college of arms’ such as selected french senior heralds attempted to create in 1407 in the Church of St. Anthoine le Petit (still used as a depository in 1456) and the english had incorporated as late as 1484, but which must have been active before that time.49

On the hypothesis that the compiler was a herald, for what purpose would he spend time (and possibly money for illustrations) on a painted armorial, which was probably made within a year? It does take time to paint a page of 12-16 coats of arms, even if the artisan uses one colour at a time on preindicated parts of the drawn arms. In this case, it appears that most simple figures were painted directly with a brush with finishing by pen or pen-like brush as needed. Some of the more complicated figures must have been drawn before painting, but that will need intensive scrutiny to document. At most, the painter could have done four pages a day, so it would take about 3 months' full time work to make it, and that excludes any editing of the sources. Agreed, the time estimate may be off by a high percentage, and so would any cost estimate be, if a workshop did the painting and copying. But even spending 10 %, not 33 % as estimated, of his time on this would impede his possibilities of earning money. Would a vademecum be worth that much? Most heralds spent a lot of time acting as messengers or simply waiting to be despatched, and during that time would not be able to sit and paint. On the other hand, we do know that senior heralds such as Gilles le Bouvier Berry Herald, Claes Heinenzoon Gelre Herald, and Jean le Fevre de St. Rémy Toison d’or King of Arms did have time to write books, though it is much easier to carry pen and ink than bottles of paint and brushes, and ink dries faster than paint.

The traditional view of an armorial being a herald’s vademecum added to over many years by collecting bits of arms and exchanging collections was never substantiated and should be abandoned. But that is not the same as saying that a herald did not have a use for a vademecum-like armorial. If his service and duties provided opportunities, he may have had to advise his master or other people at court on the arms and status of a visitor or fellow courtier. For such situations, it would be nice to have visual support of a verbal explanation. Enough reason to justify making an armorial in one's spare time, and to include a bit of artwork to make it more appetizing. That would be for the few only. Apart from their working titles, heralds would probably have different duties. It is hard to imagine that the hundred heralds used by Philippe ‘le bon’ during his reign would all be accomplished masters of ceremonials, armory, diplomacy, painting, language, geography and literature, coming as they did from employment in towns and with nobles as well as at the ducal court. Most were probably messengers and assistants.

48 Wien, State Archives, HHStA, Archives of the Order of Toison d’or, ms.57, ERQ, made in 15C, probably owned by Gilles de Rebecque, fl.1498, Hainaut king of arms.
49 For the 1407 attempt see Boos BER 18, Hiltmann SH 18-19, and Adam FM 4.

The second possibility to consider is whether an armorist, a professional illustrator, or in this case a herald, would make or procure an armorial either for a wealthy commissioner or to use as a gift for furthering his own career – both being commercial uses in modern parlance. The Berry includes a dedication picture, which suggests such a purpose, though it is not definite proof of it.\footnote{Boos BER 17 has a description of the image on fo.13v, which is available on www.gallica.bnf.fr.} If this was the case, one would expect high class artwork and very neat writing on nearly all legends. A ‘vademecum’ for display, especially one that could be carried in a scrip, would not need more than mediocre artwork. By size, the Bergshammar is a candidate for the latter, and the Toison d’or with its magnificent mounted knights for the former. By quality, drawing style and size, the Lyncenich is close to Bergshammar, even though it uses different layouts and has much fewer crested tilting helmets. It has obvious links to both examples, and both uses may draw on the same sources. The artistic quality is not really of the Toison d’or standard, and the nearly hundred ‘names only’ and more than five hundred entries without names (in toto 20 %) make it more likely that it is a ‘display-vademecum’ rather than an unfinished commercial product.

EXLIBRIS
An engraved ex-libris of Claris-Hohenloe is pasted across an older painted one for de Grez, of which only the top of the crest and the word "De Grez" is visible. A later hand has written "armes { Claris Laverne / Hohenloe". The older one belongs to the family de Grez, who held offices as heralds to the governors of the Spanish Netherlands, see [1155, 2464], and the ex-libris in [96r/1475, 170v, 176r]. On the inside binding is written "september 1639". The engraved ex-libris has the alliance arms of Louis Ferdinand Joseph de Claris Valincourt marquis de Laverne-Rhodes et de Clairmont (1696-1773) and his wife Maria Anna von Hohenloe-Bartenstein (1701-1758).

The copying of this and the next item was probably confounded. The arms fit with Bayer von Boppard, a family with seat on the Rhine, often associated with the diocese of Metz. The name fit with Kiburg / Kyburg and Kirberg / Kirchberg, seen as vassals of Mainz in BEL:213, 225 and in GEL. Binsfeld, from Jülich, has no natural association with Mainz.
As most of the items on this page appears to belong to Sachsen/Thüringen/Schelsien/Böhmen, this is probably the arms of a family Kinberg from near Opole in Schlesien.

Henry V, 1387-1422, succeeded the first lancastrian king of England, Henry IV, in 1413, invaded France in 1415, vanquished their army at Agincourt, and began a conquest of (northern) France, which in 1420 led to Henry V being accepted as heir to France when he married Catherine, daughter of Charles VI (d.1422). Their infant son Henry VI, 1421-1471, succeeded as a baby, while both England and occupied France were governed by regency councils until 1437.

The Kingdom of England was reigned by two other kings during the period of compilation and copying into the older members of the Toison d’or group: Richard II, 1367-1400, grandson of Edward III, king as a minor 1377, deposed october 1399 by his cousin Henry Bolingbroke, 1366-1413, E.Derby & E.Lancaster, crowned 1399 as Henry IV.

The quarters represent the ancient kingdoms of France and England as traditionally ranked. Arms adopted 1340 by Edward III, and modified to the present form 1402/08 by Henry IV in parallel to the french use of only 3 fleurs-de-lis.

109 duc de casters

Arms of the D.Lancaster with confounded or unfinished label, as the arms are usually borne by the prince of Wales. The title was held by the king from the accession of Henry IV in 1399. John Mowbray, d.1461, D.Norfolk & Earl Marshal, he succeeded his father John in 1432. Arms of Brotherton, effectively the arms of the office of Earl Marshal of England. The Mowbray arms were {Gu lion Ar}.
The original item in the compilation was for his grandfather Thomas (1366-1401), E.Nottingham & Earl Marshal 1383, created D.Norfolk 1397, attainted and exiled 1398, as in [581].
The office of Marshall of England officially became the Earl Marshal in 1386, though the form was used unofficially earlier. It was hereditary first in the Marshall family, then in the Bigod E.Norfolk. Thomas of Brotherton (d.1338) acquired the title in 1312. After being held by various people that office came to be hereditary in the Mowbray family from 1379, and this family and their heirs the Howards still hold it.

Introduction to a segment of 138 arms of kings and counts. The present segments 25 kings [314-336; 23 items] and 28 counts [391-501, 111 items] make only 134 items. Segment 26 princes [337-385; 25r-29r; 49 items] ought to have been included in this sum, so it was probably compiled separately and moved on binding. Presently two pedigree displays are inserted. Segment 24 Friedrich III Habsburg Ks.HRR [309-313; 21v; 5 items] in normal size, and segment 27 Ludwig Gf.Württemberg [386-390; 29v; 5 items] as a smaller display in the lower right corner, probably added later.

An allegorical painting [571-576] of the ancestors of Jean de Bourgogne, 1415-1491, created count of Étampes in 1434 by Philippe 'le bon' - a title not recognized by the French king, Charles VII. The county was obtained by Jean duc de Berry in 1388 from the dukes of Anjou and was claimed as an inheritance through his maternal grandmother. The miniature shows a helmeted lion sejant cowardly on a green mount wearing a shield bearing the arms of Bourgogne-jeune and holding the first of 4 banners in its left paw. The pageant helmet is vusted Or-Az with the golden fleur-de-lis crest of the royal family.

The four banners represent his father, Philippe count of Nevers, killed at Agincourt 1415; mother, Bonne d'Artois, 1396-1425; paternal grandmother, Marguerite de Flandre; maternal grandmother, Marguerite de Berry, 1367-1434.

The arms of Atholl with an incompatible legend. If any, the explanation might be that Henry Percy of Atholl, d.1433, was filial grandson of David Strathbogie, late E.Atholl, and that his grandfather Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland was married to Maud Lucy, d.1398, widow of Gilbert d'Umfraville, late Earl of Angus.

Several Fleets or Fletes were prominent during the 1390's, notably the Lincolnshire and London merchants related to Sir William Flete, a wealthy landowner retained by John of Gaunt; another William was a highly remunerated king's clerk and a John was keeper of the king's beds at Westminster (CPR, CCR, Roskell C). Sir William was probably related to Lawrence Flete of Wisbeach in Cambs. Arms (hrb) of the clan Nalecz. While LYN:743 has no legend, BHM:2183 adds part of GEL:528
'h abraham v sciltou' to that of his source and gets 'de swidua ostsciltou'. The latter part refers to Avraham Socha de Szczyno, d.1399, voievod of Plock on upper Wisla in Massowia. The former would be Dobrogost Swidwa of Szamotul, d.1464, High Sheriff (starost generalnego Wielkopolski) of Old Poland 1430-32, and castellan of Poznan 1436-50, or his brother Wincent of Szamotul (d.1444). ETO:890 'le sr de samochuly' also refers to Dobrogost or Wincent.

Herb of the Traby and Brzezina clans, and Radziwill in Lithuania. An unknown castellan of the royal castle of Rozprza might be the person named in ETO. Possibly Radziwill Oscikowicz, d.1477, mayordomo 1440, later wojewod of Poznan and castellan of Wilna, or his father, Krystyna-Oscika, d.1442, another castellan of Wilna. Nicolas Traba al. Tramba, Abp. Gniezno (Gneznen., Poland) 1411-22, head of the Polish delegation to Konstanz and member of the Conclave for the German Nation.

The later legend "Oesterych" in hand B is difficult to read due to cutting of top, and taken at face value would mean that the segment would date later than 1477 when Maximilian von Habsburg reigned in name of his wife, Marie de Valois-Bourgogne. However, it is more likely that this item represents the ancient carolingian principedom Lotharingia, the northern part of which evolved into Brabant.

The major family or clan of Wassenar had its origin in Wassenar between Den Haag and Leiden. The senior line held the office of BGf.Leiden. It split early into cadets and subcadets. The more important were Duivenvoorde (c.1220, near Wassenaer, descendants still living), its primary cadet Polanen with subcadet Leck (from c.1340) & Breda (in Noord-Brabant). Other primary cadets were Cranenborch, Groenevelt, Santhorst and Voorburg. There were also secondary (Asperen, Heeswijck, Castricum) and illegitimate cadets and subcadets using the names of Wassenaer, Duivenvoorde and Polanen. These branches varied the colours of the 3 wassenaers (crescents) in the arms. The same name is found with several variants of the arms. Some branches also used minor brisures for younger sons.
The holders of the lordship Polanen became extinct in 1401 with Philip S.Polanen & Kapelle, but the name was by then used as a surname, the senior branch Leck & Breda became extinct in 1401 into Nassau.

These arms are probably confounded from misreading a written blazon. Westmael, noted with arms in 1241 had two major branches, which split c.1250: Westerloo with Gu-Or and Bergen-op-Zoom with Or-Gu. The latter, from Gerhard (I, d.1308) became extinct in 1312 and 1381 into Voorne and Boutersem. Besides Bergen it held the lordships Zandvliet, Merksem and Quadebeek.

The proper reading ought to be {Or 3 fleurs-de-lis Gu & border Sa & canton Ar} corresponding to the seals of Walter de Quaderbruggen or Malo Ponte (1338) and Walter (1374), the latter captured at Bäsweiler in 1371 serving a minor captain (Jan Godenaerts). The former Walter was probably an illegitimate son of either Arnold (I, d.1312) or Gerhard (II, d.1381). A Goswin was évéhin in Louvain and had the border engrailed. Other sources has the field Ar and the canton Gu.

Margaretha von Bayern-Holland [1315], wife of Jean 'sans peur'. Bourgogne-Flandern dimidiating Wittelsbach-Holland.

Three connected items in one row describing an enfeoffment. The arms of the emperor (shield with imperial crown) delivers the banner of Jülich-Geldern into the hand of Adolph von Berg-Ravensberg. The emperor must be Sigismund von Luxembourg-Böhmen, d.1437, Deutsche König 1411 and emperor 1433. The herald-painter must have mistaken the event. Adolph only inherited Jülich in 1423 from Reinald IV [1324], while Geldern went to Willem Arnold van Egmont.

Elisabeth (Isabelle) de Bar, married 1360, d.1410, mother of Jan (V) van Arkel [1334].

Probably Vytautis, Grand Duke of Lithuania & Rus 1382, and Samogithia in 1422. d.1430. The knight is known as Vytautas and the 'ship with doorway' or 'fender' symbol on the shield as 'pillars of Gediminas' or Kiejstut [1754], later adopted as the symbol of the armed forces of the independent Lithuania. Grand Duke Gediminas, d.1341, stopped the advance of the Teutonic Order, and was grandfather of Ladislas Jagiello (Jogailo) and Svidrigailo of the Jagiello branch and Vytautis of the Kiejstut branch. Jagiello became King of Poland as Ladislas II in 1386 and died 1434. Heymowski LYN reads "[hertoghe von lettouen] onde von rusen".

Margaretha von Brieg, 1342-1386, impaling her husband Albrecht von Bayern-Holland. Her dress is per pale of her husband with Hainaut-Holland qtg Bayern and her paternal Brieg.

Margaretha von Böhmen, 1296-1322, paternal grandmother of Margaretha von Brieg and wife of Boleslaw (III) of Breslau & Liegnitz & Brieg and daughter of Wenzel II King of Böhmen.

Apparent confusion between Liegnitz and Schwiednitz. Neither is appropriate for the maternal grandmother of Margaretha von Brieg, who was Mathilde von Brandenburg (d.1329), the wife of Heinrich (II/IV) Hz.Glogau (d.1342), and mother of Agnes von Glogau. No relevant marital relations was found between either Braunsweig nor Glogau and the Liegnitz or Schwiednitz branches of the maison Piast. The eagle of Liegnitz is party per pale Sa-Gu. One possible explanation is that the compiler misread an abbreviation for Braunsweig for Brandenburg and transposed the two arms.

Introduction to the original 24th book of miscellaneous arms.

Possibly reserved for a county coat of arms for Zeeland.

The ancient family Voorne, châtelains de Zeelande and lords of Bergen-op-Zoom, became extinct in 1337 with Gerrit, o.s.p.m. The arms were probably used as representative of the castellany, one of the 3 major subdivisions of Holland. They had a major cadet Heenvliet, also on Voorn-Putten island, and a subcadet Kattendijk on Walcheren, both with Gu-Ar.

Legend is severely cut.

Hendrik (II) van Borselen S.Vere & Zandenburg, d.1474, Generalrentmeester in Holland 1436, CTdO 1445, C.Grandpré 1453. The Borselen family was split into 2 main lines by 1330, the lords of Vere and (junior) of Brigdam with sublines of Soubourg and Sint-Martinsdijk. The 1290 versions of their arms were {fess acc. 3 estoiles in chf}.

Philip van Borselen S.Borselen & Kortgene, o.s.p.1431, Statthalter in Holland 1430, brother of Jakob S.Brigdam (d.1426) and uncle of Adrian [2618] and Jacob [2615]. He sealed with {fess / label ch. mullet on 1st} in 1430 and with the fess plain in 1431.

Rudolf von Diepholz, d.1455, Bp. Utrecht 1423, son of Johan (II) and Kunigunde von Oldenburg or his elder brother Konrad (VII) von Diepholz (d.1424). He was challenged by a civic insurrection in 1449, which included many of the participants in the tournament of 1441.

Pedigree table [2681-2685]: Tilting helmet with crown and bull's horns. The presentation of ancestors is irregular. The usual format is F - M / P / FM - MM, but here it appears to be FM - M / P / FMM - (MM or FFM), P being the proband with arms as his father, unless he has it differentiated.

Arms of Oldenburg. The more common arms of the Delmenhorst branch of Oldenburg, as used by Kings of Denmark, is {Az cross couped Or}, first used 1474 by Gerhard (II) Gf. Oldenburg & Delmenhorst and brother of Christian I, first King of Denmark of the Oldenburg line. In 1526 incorporated in the great arms of Denmark. A castle was built at Delmenhorst around 1200 by Johan (I) Gf.Oldenburg and the title used by his younger son, Otto (II). The arms of the maternal grandmother would be at this place in a regular display, and it could be, if the Kunigunde, who married Konrad (II) Gf.Oldenburg (d.1401) in 1367, was of the Delmenhorst (Oldenburg) branch. There were several intermarriages between branches of the maison Oldenburg. But this display is irregular, and Jutta von Delmenhorst, FFM of Bishop Rudolf, wife of Rudolf (III) von Diepholz (fl.1300-1350) and daughter of Otto (II) Gf.Delmenhorst (d.1304), is more likely.
