Introduction:

The 22 arms from a series of 87 mostly empty shields on ff.158r-161v in the manuscript Paris, Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal ms.5014, was first related to emperor Otto IV as late as 1989 by Leon Jéquier, and was published (in german) by Werner Paravicini in Archivum Heraldicum, 1993, 107:99-146 (OAK) – from which the present paper have been extracted and a few comments and references to other armorials added. Readers reasonably proficient in german ought to consult the very excellent discussion and identification by professor Paravicini, formerly director of the Deutsche Historische Institut in Paris.<sup>1</sup>

After weighing the evidence Paravicini concluded that this short collection might be a (rather bad) copy of a genuine armorial collated in 1198, the year the welfer Otto was elected and crowned king of the Romans – making it the oldest surviving armorial. This would in itself be impressing as Michel Pastoureau have only noted 174 coats-of-arms in France by that date.<sup>2</sup> The present author do not agree with the conclusion of professor Paravicini and regard the armorial as spurious, probably created by an antiquarian from lists of charter witnesses and chronicles – a possibility duly noted by Paravicini. But his excellent discussion gives a valuable insight into the early german heraldry and the problems of identification and assesment of armorials.

My conclusion is mainly based on two arguments: firstly a personal appreciation of the works of the copyist of ms.5014: Philippe-Nicolas d'Aumale, dit le Marquis d'Haucourt, a french protestant living in exile in the Low Countries around 1660; and secondly I find 11 of the 22 arms inappropriate and unlikely to have been in a presumed early armorial. Some of the blank items might well have held text and / or arms unintelligible to d'Haucourt, probably in german, but the tail end could well just be predrawn shields intended for other uses. The reader will make his own decision on the merits of the opposite views.

d'Haucourt filled several notebooks with miscellaneous copies of armorials, including one (CHA) misattributed to Jean Lefèvre de Saint-Rémy Toison d'Or king-of-arms and formerly herald Charolais.<sup>3</sup> From my own examination of several of these, d'Haucourt often copied a part of one armorial, inserted first some notes of a different nature, then a part of another armorial, before going back to the first one. Unfortunately the d'Haucourt copies are the only surviving versions of several armorials.

For the individual items, see below.

Notes:

1 Unless otherwise noted the identifications, arguments and the data on which they are based are accepted as given by Paravicini. In general, his references will not be repeated here, except for a bit of overlap, e.g. the ESNF genealogies.

2 Pastoureau TH 303.

3 The notebooks, incl. mss. 5010, 5322, 4172, 4150 (CHA) and 5320, are presently in the Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal in Paris. Another is a copy of the Armorial de la Paix d'Arras, APA/b, BnF, ms.fr.8199, see Clemmensen APA, Clemmensen OM and Paravicini OAK for the mss.

158r1 eagle isst; 3 lions passt guard {OS, GO}
 Otto IV (Welf), d.1218, titular Hz.Sachsen, D.Aquitaine & C.Poitou & E.York, king of the Romans 1198, Ks.HRR 1209, son of Heinrich 'Löwe' & Margaretha Plantagenet, educated in England at the courts of his grandfather Henry II and uncle Richard I 'Lionhart'. He married secondly in 1214 Marie de Brabant (1191-1260).
 The arms are emended to those documented on the Mauritius sword, the Quedlingburg casket and seal of empress Maria (1214, Rabbow, Kleeblatt 2010, 1:26-43). In Harcourt's manuscript : uncoloured, on an eagle an escutcheon with per pale a lion and two lions passant, the latter for Braunschweig.
 At top of the page: 'seigneurs qui leverent banieres pour l'empereur / otton c de brunswic et de poitou fils henri le lion / duc de saxe et de mahau d'angleterre, 1198, et fierent couroner a aix'.

 Henri (I), 1165-1235, D.Brabant & Bas-Lorraine 1190. Heinrich was a welfer supporter until his change to the Staufers in 1202/04. His daughter Maria (1191-1260) was engaged to Otto IV in 1198, but they only married in 1214. He sealed with a lion in 1192, but used an eagle on his counterseal of 1190.
 The inescutcheon, known as arms of Lotharingia or Niederlothringen, is only known from seals of the younger brothers of Heinrich.
 No colours, proposed as Gu-Ar by Paravicini as in CTE:16 of 1264, but note the Sa-Or in BIG:159 of 1254 and MPA:43 of 1244/59. The change of colours was attributed to the shift of allegiance in 1202/04 by Paravicini, by others proposed as new arms adopted af a pilgrimage to Jerusalem 1183.
